BIBLE BELT BLUES

By Hal Crowther

Award-winning critic, essayist, and journalist Hal Crowther, a progressive Southerner renowned for his sharp political and social commentary, is decidedly angry about current social and political events, but few writers are more able than he to articulate the problems, the issues, and even the bitter humor of our present situation. With a keen focus on the Bible Belt, the American South, he finds plenty of fodder for the blues: the descent from George Washington to Donald Trump, the difficulty of finding civil political discourse in a world where folks spew vitriol from behind their keyboards, Klu Klux Klan members marching down the street in Crowther's hometown, the infantilization of culture (starring Mark Zuckerberg), the continued intertwining of religion and governance, and more.

VERSIONS AND SUBVERSIONS: The Cover Songs That Changed Music

By Nate Patrin

Rolling Stone: "Groundbreaking...a significant contribution to hip-hop studies." (Bring That Beat Back)

Publishers Weekly: "Lovers of film and music will be delighted with how Patrin brings the two together." (The Needle and the Lens)

Music writer Nate Patrin returns with a third kaleidoscopic examination of the surprising ways songs are given additional life through new contexts – this time, the cover version. Musicians both renowned and obscure have found new means of expression through the works of others. Examples include Aretha Franklin's cover of Otis Redding's "Respect"; Run-D.M.C.'s genre-bending revival of Aerosmith's "Walk This Way"; and Johnny Cash's world-weary cover of Nine Inch Nails' "Hurt." Patrin is previously author of Bring That Beat Back: How Sampling Built Hip-Hop (UMP/2020) and The Needle and the Lens: Pop Goes to the Movies from Rock'n'Roll to Synthwave (UMP/2023).
