'Pemi Aguda THE SUICIDE MOTHERS

When The Suicide Mothers was a work-in-progress, it was awarded The Deborah Rogers Foundation Writers Award, judged by Max Porter, Sarah Perry, and Ian Rankin. Here's what they said:

"And to our winner: first prize goes to 'Pemi Aguda for The Suicide Mothers. This novel begins with a real wow moment and sustains momentum as it draws us into a world that is utterly contemporary yet has room for the mythic and supernatural. The politics of Lagos, environmental concerns, and the coming of age of the young and pregnant protagonist make for a wonderfully kinetic and gripping story."

In The Suicide Mothers, twenty-three-year-old Yosoye arrives in Lagos from her smaller home city of Ibadan, randomly assigned by the government to a post-university internship at a high-end architectural firm developing exclusive waterfront housing throughout the city. For introverted Yosoye, the plum assignment is a chance to spread her wings, build a full life, and envision a rewarding future. However, some sleuthing during her off-hours reveals a dark side to the architectural firm she works for. All those pristine developments are going up on land that was violently confiscated by the state from poor waterfront communities who had lived on it for generations. Yosoye is rattled: How can she envision her own future when she is complicit in erasing the past and destroying the future of others?

Yosoye's personal and professional crisis of faith unfolds against the eerie backdrop of an epidemic that is holding Lagos in thrall: all across the city, pregnant women are walking into the water, drowning in inexplicable suicides. The discovery that she is unexpectedly pregnant further destabilizes Yosoye. In her increasing isolation and dismay, she is visited at night by the suicide mothers, who lure her to join them beneath the waves. As Yosoye's only true friend, Kiitan, battles to keep her in the world of the living, Yosoye drifts further away, drawn by the water's call.

GHOSTROOTS: STORIES

Finalist for the 2024 National Book Award
Includes the story “Breastmilk,” shortlisted for the Caine Prize in African Writing
Longlisted for the PEN/Faulkner Award
Finalist for the LA Times Book Prize for First Fiction

“Wildly inventive and odd, but written with surgeonlike precision, these stories herald the arrival of a major voice in speculative fiction.” —Gabino Iglesias, *New York Times Book Review

In Ghostroots, ‘Pemi Aguda vividly evokes “the specter that is Lagos, bright and glittering from a distance, nothing but grime and sweat up close.” The twelve dazzling stories in this collection reveal starkly different facets of the city, from its streets full of “bustling pedestrians, evangelizing preachers, bus drivers yelling for passengers” to its colorful markets, polished offices, humble family homes, gated estates, and haunted houses. Against these varied backdrops, in stories grounded in the terrestrial world but well traversed by ghosts and spirits, characters vie for freedom from ancestral ties to family and community, from which it sometimes seems there can be no escape.

In “Manifest,” a young woman’s mother begins to see the ghost of her own abusive mother in her daughter’s face. Shortly after, the young woman is overtaken by increasingly wicked and destructive impulses. This spooky tale of possession invites us to question the extent to which we control our own destiny, and how evil is perpetuated down the generations. In “Breastmilk,” a wife forgives her husband for his infidelity. When, months later, she is unable to produce milk for her newborn, she blames herself for failing to uphold her own mother’s feminist values and doubts her own fitness for motherhood. In “The Hollow,” a junior architect shows up to take the measurements of a house her firm will be renovating; but the house, with its logic-defying layout and walls that seem to shift, gets the best of her. When the owner divulges the troubled history of the family who lived there, the architect is flooded with her own suppressed memories. These and other stories in Ghostroots dramatize the tension between our yearning to be individuals and the ways we are haunted by what came before.

CATHEDRAL OF THE DROWNED: Book Two of The Gothic Lunar Trilogy

“Cathedral of the Drowned has the vibes of Dark City and the grace of Nosferatu. An elegiac, deeply strange, wildly compelling sci-fantasy wonder dripping with gore and tenderness. --Cassandra Khaw, author of Breakable Things

A dripping, squirming gothic fantasy and love story, drawing as much from EC horror comics as from Mary Shelley and Edgar Allan Poe.

Goodnight Maggie is the leader of a gang that has controlled the docks of Red Hook, Brooklyn, for years, but in the summer of 1924, she’s under attack. There’s a new gang in town, calling themselves the Mafia, and they are killing her boys and vying for control of her most valuable commodity, moonsilk, spiderwebs smuggled from the forests of the moon, which bestow incredible dreams on those who ingest them. Maggie is no stranger to violence and will defend her territory with brutality—but she also has a secret: Charlie, a former gang member, has been visiting her at night, in a strange new form, and Maggie is in love.

Maggie sent Charlie up to the Barrowfield medical facility on the moon years ago, hoping her associate Dr. Cull could get Charlie’s unpredictable violent impulses in check. Instead, Cull split Charlie in two, rebuilding each half of his brain with moonsilk. The violent half Cull retained as his enforcer; the loving half he sent, in satellite form, to Io, a volcanic jungle moon orbiting Jupiter. Following the hostile takeover of Cull’s facility by the Alabaster Scholars, cult that worships the ancient moon spiders, Charlie’s defenseless half is stranded, sheltering in a marooned starfaring cathedral ship presided over by a giant centipede called the Bishop and sinking slowly into Io’s sea. Charlie uses the moonsilk in his brain to project an image of himself back to Maggie, his former boss and the woman he loves, but meanwhile, his own violent half has tracked him down on Io, and his time is running out.

Can Maggie, working with the fugitive Dr. Cull, rescue Charlie before he destroys himself, and before the moon spider cult exacts its revenge on Cull? In Cathedral of the Drowned, the second installment of The Lunar Gothic Trilogy after Crypt of the Moon Spider—a Wall Street Journal Best Science Fiction & Fantasy Book of 2024—Nathan Ballingrud stages a fast-paced phantasmagoric drama set in a mysteriously alive universe, in which violence and love battle for dominance before melding into one.

Ross Barkan GLASS CENTURY

“Tennis and love and the city... and the insatiable fire that is history... Glass Century has it all. Barkan’s novel is both a marvelous paean to NYC and a spectacularly moving novel.”

—Junot Díaz, author of This Is How You Lose Her

It's 1973 and Mona Glass is a 24-year-old amateur tennis star in a long-running affair with Saul Plotz, her former college professor. Her parents like Saul and desperately want the free-spirited Mona to marry. But 34-year-old Saul already has a wife and two children. One day, Saul happens on an idea: stage a fake wedding for the benefit of her old-world parents, invite a few friends in on the joke, and go about their lives.

The ruse works. Except Saul realizes he actually wants to marry Mona, who vows never to permanently tie herself to a man. After losing her job in the 1970's fiscal crisis, Mona becomes a freelance news photographer for a radical new tabloid. When she beats the competition to capture a photo of a murderous vigilante taking the city by storm, she finds herself falling for a colleague—and Saul, now a rising star in government who is butting up against a young developer named Donald Trump, fears he has lost her altogether. Years later, the affair not quite dead, Mona realizes she is pregnant with Saul's child.

Meanwhile, Saul's adult son, Tad, is traveling aimlessly across America, hunting for answers as the 1990s bleed into 9/11. Tad decides to take the darker path of the very vigilante Mona once exposed. And in the shadow of terrorism and war, Mona and Saul raise their son Emmanuel, together — keeping their life a secret from Saul's wife and children. Spanning from the 1970s to the pandemic, this soaring, heartbreaking novel is a tour de force of ambition and grace, a great American chronicle that marks the emergence of a major new talent.

THE GODDESS OF WARSAW

“Utterly gripping, The Goddess of Warsaw is a transformative and immersive story so powerful and captivating that I could not put it down. Rarely does a protagonist leap off the page and win over the heart like the unforgettable Bina Blonski. Truly one of the best books I’ve read.” —Liv Constantine, bestselling author of *The Last Mrs. Parrish

The Goddess of Warsaw is an enthralling tale of a legendary Hollywood screen goddess with a dark secret about her life in the Warsaw Ghetto. When the famous actress is threatened by someone from her past, she must put her skills into play to protect herself, her illustrious career, and those she loves, then and now.

Los Angeles, 2005. Sienna Hayes, Hollywood’s latest It Girl, has ambitions to work behind the camera. When she meets Lena Browning, the enormously mysterious and famous Golden Age movie star, Sienna sees her big break. She wants to direct a picture about Lena’s life—but the legendary actor’s murky past turns out to be even darker than Sienna dreamed.

Before she was a Living Legend, Lena Browning was Bina Blonski, a Polish Jew whose life and family were destroyed by the Nazis.

Warsaw, 1943. A member of the city’s Jewish elite, Bina Blonski and her husband, Jakub, are imprisoned in the ghastly, cramped ghetto along with the rest of Warsaw’s surviving Jews. Determined to fight back against the brutal Nazis, the beautiful, blonde Aryan-looking Bina becomes a spy, gaining information and stealing weapons outside the ghetto to protect her fellow Jews. But her dangerous circumstances grow complicated when she falls in love with Aleksander, an ally in resistance—and Jakub’s brother. While Lena accomplishes amazing feats of bravery, she sacrifices much in the process.

Over a decade after escaping the horrors of the ghetto, Bina, now known as Lena, rises to fame in Hollywood. Yet she cannot help but be reminded of her old life and hungers for revenge against the Nazis who escaped justice after the war. Her power and fame as a movie star offer Lena the chance to right the past’s wrongs . . . and perhaps even find the happy ending she never had.

A gripping page-turner of one of history’s most heroic uprisings and an actress whose personal war never ends, The Goddess of Warsaw is filled with secrets, lies, twists and turns, and a burning pursuit of justice no matter the cost.

Karen Bender
THE WORDS OF DR. L: & Other Stories

“Karen Bender’s stories deftly explore our current American moment, a troubling one that verges on insanity. Bender is concerned with love, family, and motherhood, and in these beautifully written stories she uses words to describe thoughts and feelings that I’ve never seen described before. A great writer helps us understand who we are, and what it means to be human.”

—Matthew Klam, author of *Who is Rich?

National Book Award finalist Karen E. Bender returns with a short story collection that explores the surreal situation of parents and children separating at different ages through a realistic and speculative lens—from adolescence to empty nest to caring for an aging parent

The Words of Dr. L is National Book Award Finalist’s Karen E. Bender’s third story collection. Bender uses both a realistic and a speculative lens to explore a universal situation—the ways parents and children separate at different times of life. Grounded in both contemporary America and a variety of dystopias, the stories look at adolescence, motherhood, the empty nest, and caring for the aging parent.

From a young woman who wants to learn secret words to prevent a pregnancy, to a mother who discovers an extra child in her home she has forgotten about, to a couple separated from their son in globes orbiting the Earth, the stories honor the emotional force of these situations by grappling with the themes of freedom, self-definition, youth, aging, control, and power. Bender’s work explores the ordinary in the extraordinary, using settings both familiar and speculative to discover new truths in the lifelong connection between parents and their children.

Nickolas Butler A FORTY YEAR KISS

"Nick Butler only writes good books, but this is the one that sticks most tightly in my brain and heart. While Nick dedicates the novel to Nora Ephron -- and indeed it's deftly written and should translate seamlessly to the screen -- it might be more evocative of Kent Haruf in Plainsong or Our Souls at Night. Its Midwest is weathered and described with affection and restraint; its people are presented whole and in context, the seldom-seen brought into vivid focus, their yearnings and failings intact. A Forty Year Kiss has the courage to suggest it's not too late -- for romance, or transcendence, or just to be better. It's a book for the midnight optimist that is waiting inside us all." —Leif Enger, author of Peace Like a River

From the internationally bestselling and prizewinning writer of Shotgun Lovesongs and Little Faith comes a heartwarming new novel about second chances, long-lost love, and redemption, set in small-town Wisconsin that Nickolas Butler depicts like few other writers in America.

Four decades ago, Charlie and Vivian were lovestruck newlyweds. But because of Charlie's immaturity and drinking, their marriage quickly fizzled out, and forty years' worth of time flooded in. In the intervening years, mistakes were made on both sides, and secrets carefully safe-guarded. Now, Charlie has come back to Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin to find Vivian and try to convince her to give him another chance, and Vivian must decide if she can allow Charlie back into her life when she has more to lose now than ever.

A novel of immense vulnerability and empathy, A Forty Year Kiss is a literary blue valentine, a warm, wise, and welcome love-story full of Butler's trademark bighearted blue-collar characters. These are characters who must confront whether the mistakes of the past necessarily portend the mistakes of the future. Or, can people change, grow? Is there always time for love? Or, is the security of routine the safest course of action?

Rachel Calnek-Sugin UNIVERSE OF GRACE

One afternoon, on a visit to Grandma Ruth's, a jaguar at the Bronx Zoo tells six-year-old Grace Goldberg-Li that she isn't human—something, frankly, she has always suspected. Universe of Grace travels the course of Grace's life (though it starts a couple of generations before her birth and ends millennia after her death) as she tries to figure out what—alien? animal? machine?—she might be instead.

Divided into these three parts (Alien, Animal, and Machine), the novel follows Grace as she grows distant from her sister, learns the pleasures of kleptomania, becomes a masterful teen violinist that has all of Philadelphia on its feet...then gives it all up to hide inside of sex and drugs when her female teacher scoffs at her advances. We see Grace move from Philly to DC, out of the compulsive “outsider” throes of middle and high school to cohabitation and eventual marriage with a woman getting her PhD in feminism—a loving home and family between two women and four imaginary (plushie) cats.

But why stop there? The tides turn again, and we watch Grace leave her marriage and become a tree in California who understands wildfires. We stay with Grace as she travels north and decides to become a robot named Wendy who works at the Wendy's in a rural Washington state town. The whole world is open to Grace, every possibility—and if life isn't working and she can't get the sadness to go away, then she can try again. She can take a Greyhound to Montreal and learn French; she can learn how to make her grandmother's stretched noodles in the Bay; she can go to Antarctica and have a really long conversation with a polar bear on a shrinking icecap. Whatever it takes.

Exploring whether it's Grace who's crazy, or just the world, Rachel Calnek-Sugin delivers a debut novel that moves from the surreal into the very real and back again, covering everything from our recent history with the COVID-19 pandemic and the BLM protests of 2020, to our future climate uncertainty, and discovering that nothing, in the end, is as surreal or incomprehensible as violence, or love. As Grace journeys to discover whether she really is human after all, or something else entirely, Calnek-Sugin shows us how weird and special and unpredictable — how infinitely hopeful — being human can really be.

Madeleine Cravens PLEASURE PRINCIPLE

“Here is a poetics of quiet resistance and shining anti-epiphany, of queer surplus matched with lyric understatement. Spare yet lush, cerebral yet sensual, Pleasure Principle draws our attention toward a world at once lovable and unlivable, where, if we are very attentive, we might find ‘not the pleasure of lessons but the pleasure of errors.’” —Maggie Millner, author of *Couplets

An astonishing debut collection of poems about desire and the chaos of youth.

In her stunning debut collection, Madeleine Cravens explores desire in all its transgressive power and wildness. Pleasure and pain are inextricable in these carefully observed poems, capturing a young woman on the threshold of adulthood as she seeks to understand herself. With a hard-edged vulnerability and singularly bold style, Cravens is unsparing about the struggle to make sense of one’s longings.

Taking us from the parks and plazas of Brooklyn to the freeways of California, these poems allow us to watch a life unfold where “womanhood felt like an incorrect container,” and love is performed “in the historic way, with bartering and harsh alliances.” As Cravens casts her questioning eye across the possibilities of queer relationships and the curious shapes of family bonds—both the ones we’re born into and the ones we choose—she urges readers to consider how we become ourselves.

Moving, captivating, and funny, Pleasure Principle heralds the arrival of a fearless and vibrant new voice in American poetry.

SAY HELLO TO MY LITTLE FRIEND

Finalist for the 2024 Kirkus Prize
Finalist for the LA Times Book Prize for Fiction

"I literally couldn't put this book down. Bold, surprising, moving and very funny. A story about the dreams and desires and histories buried inside our minds and bodies, our families and cities. Capó Crucet is a writer of immense talent and range."

—Charles Yu National Book Award-winning Author of *Interior Chinatown

Scarface meets Moby Dick in this groundbreaking, darkly comic novel about a young man's attempt to capitalize on his mother's murky legacy—a story steeped in Miami's marvelous and sinister magic.

Failed Pitbull impersonator Ismael Reyes—you can call him Izzy—might not be the Scarface type, but why should that keep him from trying? Growing up in Miami has shaped him into someone who dreams of being the King of the 305, with the money, power, and respect he assumes comes with it. After finding himself at the mercy of a cease-and-desist letter from Pitbull's legal team and living in his aunt's garage-turned-efficiency, Izzy embarks on an absurd quest to turn himself into a modern-day Tony Montana.

When Izzy's efforts lead him to the tank that houses Lolita, a captive orca at the Miami Seaquarium, she proves just how powerful she and the water surrounding her really are—permeating everything from Miami's sinking streets to Izzy's memories to the very heart of the novel itself. What begins as Izzy's story turns into a super-saturated fever dream as sprawling and surreal as the Magic City, one as sharp as an iguana's claws and as menacing as a killer whale's teeth. As the truth surrounding Izzy's boyhood escape from Cuba surfaces, the novel reckons with the forces of nature, with the limits and absence of love, and with the dangers of pursuing a tragic inheritance. Wildly narrated and expertly rendered, Say Hello to My Little Friend is Jennine Capó Crucet's most daring, heart-breaking, and fearless book yet.

Armen Davoudian THE PALACE OF FORTY PILLARS

Finalist for the Bergmann prize, selected by Louise Glück

"Armen Davoudian's The Palace of Forty Pillars heralds a new but already accomplished voice in American poetry, and indeed of an evolving America. Davoudian, born in Iran and Armenian by heritage, is a young master of the English language who brings to mind the high-culture wit of James Merrill and the affecting reticence of Elizabeth Bishop." —Mary Jo Salter

Wry, tender, and formally innovative, Armen Davoudian's debut poetry collection, The Palace of Forty Pillars, tells the story of a self estranged from the world around him as a gay adolescent, an Armenian in Iran, and an immigrant in America. It is a story darkened by the long shadow of global tragedies—the Armenian genocide, war in the Middle East, the specter of homophobia. With masterful attention to rhyme and meter, these poems also carefully witness the most intimate encounters: the awkward distance between mother and son getting ready in the morning, the delicate balance of power between lovers, a tense exchange with the morality police in Iran.

In Isfahan, Iran, the eponymous palace has only twenty pillars—but, reflected in its courtyard pool, they become forty. This is the gamble of Davoudian's magical, ruminative poems: to recreate, in art's reflection, a home for the speaker, who is unable to return to it in life.

US/Canada: Tin House Books (March 2024)
UK: Corsair

Armen Davoudian's poems appear in Poetry magazine, the Sewanee Review, the Los Angeles Review of Books, and elsewhere. National Book Award finalist Solmaz Sharif picked Davoudian's poem "Snow" for the Poetry Society of America's Lyric Poetry Award. Davoudian is also an active translator from Persian. He has an MFA from Johns Hopkins University and is currently a PhD candidate at Stanford University.

Susan Daitch
THE ADJUDICATOR

“Blending SF with suspense and interweaving science with speculation, Daitch’s novel offers readers a glimpse into a future that is as alien as it is disturbingly familiar. ... An engrossing story that grapples with dystopian possibilities lying at the intersection of ethics and technology.” —Kirkus Reviews

Award-winning author Susan Daitch's new novel, The Adjudicator, is a visionary cyberpunk mystery that explores the boundaries of consciousness and individual autonomy within an authoritarian state that controls the genetics of its citizens.

In a near future where the surveillance state legislates the genetic code of its citizens, babies are created in a laboratory according to a template set by parents and the corporation. It is a utopian world of perfect control, where disease has been eliminated and the human genome has reached apotheosis. Mistakes, though unlikely, still occur, and it is adjudicator Zedi Loew’s job to fix them. One day, a cold case file based on an absurd premise crosses her desk: that gene-coding can go beyond structuring the body, it can alter consciousness.

Fearing exposure, Zedi’s boss makes the case top priority, and she has only a few days to solve it. The case will prove to be an entry into a dangerous labyrinth, and Zedi follows a taut thread of information, one which, she will learn, connects to the corporation’s hidden mechanism of power as well as her own origin story.

Martín Espada JAILBREAK OF SPARROWS

“Martín Espada's beautiful, inconsolable, tender, and unrelenting poems of protest and testimony offer us a landscape where song bears witness and witness becomes a chant, which is to say: a state of being. A lyric narrative in Espada's hands has long become a kind of healing ceremony of the ancients. A lyric narrative in his hands has long become a shield against the onslaught of the world's sharper edges. Espada knows that words are never just words—words outlive us, words enter the bodies of others, words are an art of possession and Martín Espada is a brilliant practitioner of this art.” —Ilya Kaminsky, author of Deaf Republic and Dancing in Odessa

In this brilliant new collection of poems, National Book Award winner Martín Espada offers narratives of the forgotten and the unforgettable.

The poems in Jailbreak of Sparrows reveal the ways in which the ordinary becomes monumental: family portraits, politically charged reports, and tributes to the unsung. Espada's focus ranges from the bombardment of his family's hometown in Puerto Rico amid an anti-colonial uprising to the murder of a Mexican man by police in California, from the poet's adolescent brawl on a basketball court over martyred baseball hero Roberto Clemente to his unorthodox methods of representing undocumented migrants as a tenant lawyer. We also encounter “love songs” to the poet's wife from a series of unexpected voices: a bat with vertigo, the polar bear mascot for a minor league ballclub, a disembodied head in a jar.

Jailbreak of Sparrows is a collection of arresting poems that roots itself in the image, the musicality of language, and the depth of human experience. “Look at this was all he said, and all he had to say,” the poet says about his father, a photographer who documented his Puerto Rican community in Brooklyn and beyond. The poems of Martín Espada tell us: Look.

Martín Espada has published more than twenty books as a poet, editor, essayist and translator, including Vivas to Those Who Have Failed and Pulitzer finalist The Republic of Poetry. His many honors include the Ruth Lilly Prize, the Shelley Memorial Award, and a Guggenheim Fellowship. His poetry collection, Floaters, won the 2021 National Book Award for Poetry. There’s only one thing that dulls the pressure: alcohol. Vodka, beer, peppermint schnapps—alcohol smooths the sharp edges of Bella’s life. And what’s the big deal? Everyone drinks. Besides, Bella can stop whenever she wants. But after she gets blackout drunk at a Thanksgiving party and wakes up in the hospital, it’s time to face reality. And for Bella, reality means rehab.

Gorgeously written and deeply compassionate, Kathleen Glasgow’s The Glass Girl is a candid exploration of the forces pushing young women toward addiction—and what it really takes to help them get better.

Lavanya Lakshmi

LEAVE AND COME BACK

A debut novel in the vein of Kevin Kwan's Crazy Rich Asians and Curtis Sittenfeld's Romantic Comedy that's lovingly inspired by modern romance novels and the classic Bollywood film "Dilwale Dulhania Le Jayenge" (known to its fans as DDLJ).

There's no word in Tamil for 'goodbye.' Instead, you say Poitu varen. I'll leave and I'll come back. 31-year-old Simran Murthy is great at leaving. Coming back? Not really her thing. But Simran is reluctantly going home for the first time in seven years to attend a week-long Indian wedding and re-claim what is rightfully hers: the keys to the house in Chennai where she grew up. Not part of the plan? Having Leo, the white boyfriend who no one in the family knows about, crash the wedding. So, Simran's cousins swing into action, borrowing the plot of "DDLJ" to help Simran and Leo win over Auntie Veena, the tough-as-nails family matriarch.

On the surface, Leave and Come Back is the swoon-worthy love story of Simran and Leo, complete with grand romantic gestures and hilarious escapades that don't always work out. But Lavanya Lakshmi's novel gradually reveals itself to be about a fractured family learning how to process the one thing that nobody will mention out loud, the death of Simran's parents when she was 15. As the family opens up and faces its grief, Simran and Leo ditch the rom-com gimmicks and learn how to get real with each other.

Lavanya Lakshmi was born in New Delhi and grew up in Beijing, Shanghai, and Hong Kong. One of her many childhood homes was a suite on the 37th floor of a luxury hotel. She lives in Toronto, where she is a sales director for Penguin Random House Canada. This is her first novel.

Rebecca Lehmann THE BEHEADING GAME

For fans of Wolf Hall and the musical SIX comes a delectable debut novel.

The Beheading Game begins in the hours after Anne Boleyn's death, when she wakes to find herself buried unceremoniously in an arrow chest, her head wrapped in linen at her knees. Her first task is to escape the Tower of London; her second is to find a needle and thread so she can sew her head back on. Next, she sets about hatching a revenge plot to kill her husband, King Henry VIII, before he can marry his mistress, her own lady-in-waiting Jane Seymour, and produce a rival heir who will usurp Anne's daughter Elizabeth's claim to the throne. While on the run, she meets Alice, a street-smart prostitute who becomes her guide through London, a good friend, and maybe more.

Though Anne used her proximity to the king to promote religious reform and education, she soon realizes how little she knows about life in the real world. Traveling in the guise of a commoner, she discovers the rich and complicated lives of her former subjects, in a way that wasn't accessible to her before. After following Alice to the fenlands, the ecologically lush region where she lives with her children, Anne is tempted to stay, seeing a chance at the peace and happiness that eluded her as queen. Instead, concerned for her daughter, whom she loves above all else, she returns to London, after a journey through the wilds of England filled with danger and magic and steeped in Arthurian legend, and breaks into Whitehall Palace, confronts her old rival Thomas Cromwell, and lies in wait for the king.

Part speculative fiction, part historical fiction, part ghost story, and part revenge tale, The Beheading Game is a meticulously researched, tightly plotted, queer-feminist retelling of one of history's most egregiously wronged women. It's also a pleasure to read, carried flawlessly along by Lehmann's poised yet forceful prose. Readers who enjoyed Lauren Groff's The Vaster Wilds, Xochitl Gonzalez's Anita de Monte Laughs Last, and Rachel Yoder's Nightbitch will be delighted to discover Lehmann's compelling, heartfelt, and intelligent take on Anne Boleyn.

Kelly Link THE BOOK OF LOVE

National Bestseller

Longlisted for the 2024 Center for Fiction First Novel Prize

Finalist for the LA Times Book Prize in SFF and Speculative Fiction

“A dreamlike, profoundly beautiful novel [that] pushes our understanding of what a fantasy novel can be.” —The New York Times Book Review (Editors’ Choice)

Three teenagers open a door in a dark, forsaken place and emerge back into the world. Late one December night, Laura, Daniel, and Mo find themselves, confused and disembodied, blinking under the fluorescent lights of their high school music room. They are greeted by Mr. Anabin—the man they know as their music teacher—who restores the ghostly teenagers to their corporeal forms with a flick of his fingers and explains: nearly a year ago they went missing from their hometown, the small seaside community of Lovesend, Massachusetts, and have long been presumed dead. Which they are. Desperate to reclaim their lives, the teenagers agree to the terms of a deal that Mr. Anabin strikes with the keeper of death’s door. Laura, Daniel, and Mo—and a mysterious fourth soul who crossed back over with them—will compete to remain in the mortal realm. They will be set a series of magical tasks; in the meantime, they may return to their families and friends, but they may tell no one where they have been. In the end, there will be winners and losers: Two will remain. Two will return.

But their resurrection has attracted the notice of several supernatural figures, all with their own agendas. As Laura, Daniel, and Mo grapple with love, loss, and heartbreak in the lives they left behind—Laura in a love-hate relationship with her grieving sister Susannah; Daniel in a turbulent romance with Susannah; Mo distraught to discover that his grandmother, the pioneering Black romance writer Caitlin Hightower who raised him, has died—these mysterious others begin to arrive, engulfing Lovesend in danger and chaos. When the teenagers realize that they are pawns in a much more consequential game—one that has played out across millennia—it becomes imperative that they avert the looming disaster and solve the mystery of their deaths. The Book of Love showcases Kelly Link at the height of her powers, channeling potent magic and attuned to all varieties of love—from friendship to romance to abiding family ties, with her trademark compassion, wit, literary derring-do, and intelligence. In this deeply creative work told from many points of view and celebrating a full spectrum of identities, readers will find joy (and a little terror) and an affirmation that love goes on, even when we cannot.

Nicolás Medina Mora AMERICA DEL NORTE

“Here’s the thing about Nico Medina Mora’s debut novel: it reads like his tenth. It feels like the kind of casually elegant and elastically curious book that a master storyteller would spend a lifetime working toward. And yet, America del Norte sings to us through both its jubilant imagination and wounded intelligence so that we might all get a glimpse at a brand-new way of writing the world.” —John D’Agata, author of About a Mountain

A young man from an elite Mexican family travels back and forth between the United States and Mexico in a dizzyingly inventive bildungsroman.

For fans of Hernan Diaz and Teju Cole, this autofiction debut explores whiteness, power, immigration, and the history of Mexican literature, from the 17th century letters of a peevishly polymathic Spanish colonizer to the contemporary packaging of Mexican lit for a US audience.

Sebastián lived a childhood of privilege among the Mexican elite. Now in his twenties, he has a degree from Yale, an American girlfriend, and a slot in the University of Iowa’s MFA program.

But Sebastián’s well-curated bi-national life begins to fall apart, shaken by the Trump administration’s increasingly stringent restrictions on immigrants, his mother’s terminal cancer, the cracks in his relationships with his American girlfriend, and his father’s humiliation and forced resignation at the hands of Mexico’s new president. As he struggles through the Trump and López Obrador years, Sebastián must confront his father’s role in the Mexican drug war, his whiteness in Mexican contexts even as he is often perceived as a person of color in the US, his place in a Mexican elite that has ruled the country since 1521, and the contemporary literary cultures he is both scornful of and desperately want to be part of.

Debut novelist Medina Mora blends the Latin American literary traditions of Roberto Bolaño with the autofiction of US writers like Ben Lerner to wrestle with identity, privilege, history, and the questions: Who is a Mexican writer writing for? How are we to live while knowing that history may interrupt and shatter our lives at any moment?

Lydia Millet THE ATAVISTS

“Is there a writer more profound and less pretentious than Lydia Millet? In her novels and story collections, a dozen in all, Millet deals out existential questions like playing cards, and like any good casino dealer, her hands never shake.” —NPR

A fast-moving, heartbreaking collection of linked stories that evokes the joy and alienation between generations and classes in the era of mass overwhelm.

From Lydia Millet—“the American writer with the funniest, wisest grasp on how we fool ourselves” (Chicago Tribune)—comes an inventive new collection of short fiction. Atavists follows a group of families, couples, and loners in their collisions, confessions, and conflicts in a post-pandemic America of artificially lush lawns, beauty salons, tech-bro mansions, assisted-living facilities, big-box stores, gastropubs, college campuses, and medieval role-playing festivals.

The various “-ists” who people these linked stories—from futurists to insurrectionists to cosmetologists—include a professor who’s morbidly fixated on an old friend’s Instagram account; a woman convinced that her bright young son-in-law is watching geriatric porn; a bodybuilder who lives an incel’s fantasy life; a couple who surveil the neighbors after finding obscene notes in their mailbox; a pretentious academic accused of plagiarism; and a suburban ex-marathoner dad obsessed with hosting refugees in a tiny house in his backyard.

Lydia Millet is the author of A Children’s Bible, a finalist for the National Book Award and a New York Times Top 10 book of 2020, among other works of fiction. Uche Okonkwo A KIND OF MADNESS

Includes the story “Animals,” shortlisted for the Caine Prize in African Writing

“Okonkwo explores in her agile debut collection the private feelings of her characters and the social pressures they face in contemporary Nigeria.... Okonkwo has a Chekhovian eye for the tangle of internal motivations and assumptions that steer her characters. Particularly well rendered, in “Shadow,” is the affection of a young boy, alienated from his own family, who fixates on a visiting aunt, only to realize over time that he is not as special to her as she is to him. Readers will be eager for more of Okonkwo’s artful writing.” —Publishers Weekly, starred review

A searing, unflinching collection of stories set in Nigeria that explores themes of community expectations, familial strife, and the struggle for survival.

Set in contemporary Nigeria, Uche Okonkwo’s A Kind of Madness is a collection of ten stories concerned with literal madness but also those private feelings that, when left unspoken, can feel like a type of madness: desire, desperation, hunger, fear, sadness, shame, longing. In these stories, a young woman and her mother bask in the envy of their neighbors when the woman receives an offer of marriage from the family of a doctor living in Belgium—though when the offer fails to materialize, that envy threatens to turn vicious, pitting them both against their village. A teenage girl from a poor family is dazzled by her rich, vivacious friend, but as the friend’s behavior grows unstable and dangerous, she must decide whether to cover for her or risk telling the truth to get her the help she needs. And a lonely daughter finds herself wandering a village in eastern Nigeria in an ill-fated quest, struggling to come to terms with her mother’s mental illness.

In vivid, evocative prose, A Kind of Madness unravels the tensions between mothers and daughters, husbands and wives, best friends, siblings, and more, marking the arrival of an extraordinary new talent in fiction and inviting us all to consider the question: why is it that the people and places we hold closest are so often the ones that drive us to madness?

Emma Pattee TILT

“Tilt is a swift, exhilarating punch to the gut, the most embodied twenty-four hours of narrative I can remember reading. Through the eyes of the prickly, funny, and very pregnant narrator, we viscerally experience the surreal, unbearable, comic, and beautiful ways that humans behave in a crisis. The Road meets Nightbitch meets What to Expect When You’re Expecting. I loved this novel.” —Lydia Kiesling, author of The Golden State and *Mobility

Set over the course of one day, a heart-racing debut about a woman facing the unimaginable, determined to find safety.

Last night, you and I were safe. Last night, in another universe, your father and I stood fighting in the kitchen.

Annie is nine months pregnant and shopping for a crib at IKEA when a massive earthquake hits Portland, Oregon. With no way to reach her husband, no phone or money, and a city left in chaos, there’s nothing to do but walk.

Making her way across the wreckage of Portland, Annie experiences human desperation and kindness: strangers offering help, a riot at a grocery store, and an unlikely friendship with a young mother. As she walks, Annie reflects on her struggling marriage, her disappointing career, and her anxiety about having a baby. If she can just make it home, she’s determined to change her life.

A propulsive debut, Tilt is a primal scream of a novel about the disappointments and desires we all carry, and what each of us will do for the people we love.

Hannah Pittard IF YOU LOVE IT, LET IT KILL YOU

“Hannah Pittard’s new novel is utterly compelling. I felt like I was standing beside Hannah while she peered in a mirror, looking for truth (in fiction, where it of course resides), pointing out flaws, but allowing the cracks of beauty to be revealed too. Pittard’s work lets nothing off the hook, and I read the book in one sitting, desperate to know if she—and therefore I—would be all right by the end. I love Hannah Pittard’s dark and squirrely mind. I’m a huge fan.” —Ann Napolitano, New York Times bestselling author of *Hello Beautiful

A refreshingly irreverent novel about art, desire, domesticity, freedom, and the intricacies of the twenty-first-century female experience, by the acclaimed novelist Hannah Pittard

Divorced and childless by choice, Hana P. has built a cozy life in Lexington, Kentucky, teaching at the flagship university, living with a fellow academic, and helping him raise his preteen daughter. Her sister’s sprawling family lives just across the street, and their long-divorced, deeply complicated parents have also recently moved to town.

One day, Hana learns that an unflattering version of herself will appear prominently—and soon—in her ex-husband’s debut novel. For a week, her life continues largely unaffected by the news—she cooks, runs, teaches, entertains—but the morning after baking mac ‘n’ cheese from scratch for her nephew’s sixth birthday, she wakes up changed. The contentment she’s long enjoyed is gone. In its place: nothing. A remarkably ridiculous midlife crisis ensues, featuring a talking cat, a visit to the dean’s office, a shadowy figure from the past, a Greek chorus of indignant students whose primary complaints concern Hana’s autofictional narrative, and a game called Dead Body.

Steeped in the subtleties and strangeness of contemporary life, If You Love It, Let It Kill You is a deeply nuanced and disturbingly funny examination of memory, ownership, and artistic expression for readers of Miranda July’s All Fours and Sigrid Nunez’s The Friend.

US/Canada: Henry Holt (July 2025)

Hannah Pittard is the author of six books, including the novels Listen to Me and The Fates Will Find Their Way. She is a winner of the Amanda Davis Highwire Fiction Award, a MacDowell fellow, and a professor of English at the University of Kentucky. She lives with her boyfriend and stepdaughter in Lexington. Much of her family lives nearby.

Lawrence Robbins
THE PRESIDENT'S LAWYER

Finalist for an Edgar Prize

“Lawrence Robbins knows his way around a courtroom drama—like the real-life expert that he is—and merges the best of John Grisham with The West Wing in this suspenseful, riveting thriller.” —Douglas Brunt, New York Times bestselling author of The Mysterious Case of Rudolf Diesel

A high-stakes legal thriller that is perfect for fans of John Grisham and Scott Turow following a Washington, DC, litigator who is hired to defend his best friend, the former President of the United States, against a murder charge.

After a long career as one of DC’s most powerful litigators, Rob Jacobson is faced with the case of a lifetime: the former President of the United States—his childhood best friend—has been accused of murdering his mistress.

Rob knows he’s the only one who can prove his friend’s innocence, but he is soon overwhelmed as he attempts to devise a strategy to defend an authoritative man with a taste for infidelity, serious anger issues, and unconventional sexual appetites.

As the high-profile case unfurls, the troubled, intertwining pasts of the two men complicate Rob’s efforts and soon, doubts begin to grow in his head. Could his oldest friend truly be capable of murder or is something even darker at play?

Robin Romm
RADICAL EMPATHY

“The ten stories—all marvels—in Robin Romm’s Radical Empathy establish once and for all that she’s a master of the short story. In switchblade-wicked prose, Romm conjures the realities of love, marriage, parenthood, and work so vividly that they bust the bounds of what passes for safely “normal.” A beautiful, brilliant, devastating collection.” —Ben Fountain

In this new collection of short stories that Ben Fountain declares “all marvels,” Robin Romm (author of The Mercy Papers) revels in the mess behind the slick veneer of modern life. A financially-strapped college student sells her sought after “Ivy League eggs” to a movie star, then wrestles with her feelings as the child grows up in the public eye. A long-married wife in the midst of a bungled kitchen remodel imagines the excitement of her neighbor’s unstable erotic life. Isolated by quarantine, a young widow contends with a talking daffodil that panders to her in therapy-speak. Disquieting, original and strangely reassuring, these ten new stories make quick work of the easy truths and thoughtless salvos that keep us from seeing the wildness of our irreducible lives.

US/Canada: Four Way Books (September 2024)

Robin Romm is the author of two short story collections, The Mother Garden, and Radical Empathy; a chapbook of stories, The Tilt; as well as a memoir, The Mercy Papers (a New York Times Notable Book). She also compiled and edited the essay collection, Double Bind: Women on Ambition. She’s been awarded an O’Henry Prize in short fiction and was a finalist for the Pen USA prize for her first collection. Her journalism and nonfiction writing have appeared in The Atlantic, The New York Times, Wired, O Magazine, Parents, and Slate. She lives in Portland, Oregon, with her partner, the writer Don Waters, and their two spitfire daughters.

Chava Rosenfarb, translated by Goldie Morgentaler IN THE LAND OF THE POSTSCRIPT

Winner of the 2024 Canadian Jewish Literary Award

“Rosenfarb’s characters, meanwhile, embrace life, love, the contemporary world, even while fearing that such embraces are impossible. This wider vista of exploration takes Rosenfarb to far-flung places, literally and metaphorically.... In “Edgia’s Revenge” the collection’s key novella—and arguably Rosenfarb’s masterpiece—a complicated, decades-long pas de deux plays out between a female kapo and the woman she has saved: it is a story of doubling and desire, with shades of Edgar Allan Poe.” —Times Literary Supplement

Searingly insightful, imaginative stories of life in the long shadow of the Holocaust, by a major figure of Yiddish literature.

In the mid-twentieth century, Montreal experienced a flowering of Yiddish literature as waves of Jewish refugees settled in Canada. Chava Rosenfarb (1923–2011) was at the forefront of these new Canadian writers, publishing poetry, drama, and fiction that drew from her formative years in the Jewish ghetto of Lodz, Poland, followed by Auschwitz and Bergen-Belsen. Rosenfarb’s engrossing and sharply rendered stories delve into the complex psyches of a diverse array of survivors who, much like herself, throw themselves into their Canadian lives, yearning to move forward but unable to free themselves of the horrors of the past. A factory worker whose wife and children perished in the camps cannot communicate with a coworker, a flirtatious young French Canadian; the devastation of his past is unknowable to her. An elderly Jewish woman’s dying wish is to make love to a young Frenchman in Paris, the city where she met her husband; the young man absorbs the passion and pain of her life and is utterly transformed by the encounter. In a truly unforgettable story, a former kapo—a Jewish woman who discovered her own capacity for brutality to survive the camps—manipulates her way into the life of a former prisoner whose life she saved, clinging to this shred of proof of her own goodness, until the friendship warps and implodes.

Lodz declared 2023, the centennial of the author’s birth, the year of Chava Rosenfarb, painting the former Jewish ghetto where she was imprisoned with murals of her face and hosting an international conference on her work. With interest in this visionary writer on the rise, the time is right for readers around the world to discover Rosenfarb’s masterful stories, which have been collected for the first time in English in In the Land of the Postscript.

World English: White Goat Press (May 2023)

Chava Rosenfarb was one of the most important Yiddish writers of the second half of the twentieth century. Her trilogy, The Tree of Life, was awarded the 1979 Manger Prize, Israel’s highest award for Yiddish literature.

Goldie Morgentaler is a Canadian Yiddish-to-English literary translator and a professor at the University of Lethbridge, where she teaches nineteenth-century British and American literature and modern Jewish literature. She is also the daughter of Chava Rosenfarb.

In between the space of time when Ezra lights themselves on fire and when Ezra dies the world of this book flashes before their eyes. Everyone Ezra's ever loved, every place they've felt queer and at home, or queer and out of place, reveals itself in an instant. Unfolding in fragments of memory, Ezra dissolves into the family, religion, desire, losses, pains, and joys that made them into the person that's decided on this final act of protest.

Told in lyric fragments that span both lifetimes and geography, Yr Dead is a queer, Jewish, diasporic coming-of-age story that questions how our historical memory shapes our political and emotional present. Visceral, propulsive, and at turns fluorescently beautiful and fluorescently tragic, Yr Dead is the electric debut novel from award-winning writer Sam Sax, one of our most dynamic and imaginative writers.

Mahreen Sohail SMALL SCALE SINNERS

“Pure brilliance. I can’t remember the last time I was so floored by a collection, these strange and wondrous narratives that revel in the sensation that, as one character puts it, ‘something wild is travelling in each of our bodies.’ Sohail is funny and dark and absolutely in control, and she has written a masterful debut.” —Kevin Wilson, author of *Now Is Not The Time to Panic

An astonishing debut collection examining women’s lives in Pakistan and interrogating the burdens, and freedom, of love.

In twelve electric, potent stories, Mahreen Sohail explores the facets of women’s lives, as daughters, siblings, and mothers, in marriage, and alone. She writes of women who are fluent in the language of grief, but refuse to be confined by it; of lives that are full of desire and betrayal; of a world in which menace lurks just under the surface of the ordinary. Neighbors spy on each other; estranged families reunite at a funeral; schoolgirls are caught up in a murder. As Garth Risk Hallberg noted when reading Sohail’s work, she has “a flawless eye for detail and a daring instinct to tack and swerve and startle in stories that are wonderful on sisterhood, on sex, on Pakistan, on coming of age.” For fans of Jamel Brinkley, Colin Barrett and Yoon Choi.

Lior Torenberg JUST WATCH ME

“Lior Torenberg has her finger on the pulse and a special flair for getting her narrator into lots of trouble. Her work will make you laugh out loud and break your heart.”—Helen Schulman, author of *This Beautiful Life

For fans of Big Swiss and Fleabag, Lior Torenberg's Just Watch Me follows a charismatic misfit as she livestreams herself for seven straight days to raise money for her comatose sister's life support. This is Odelia “Dell” Danvers's chance to — finally! — be the good sister. But Dell, whose motives are as mixed as her feelings, is her own worst enemy. Even her screen name, Mademoiselle Dell, is a split personality: a little dominating and a little demure.

As Dell chases donations and a higher ranking on the streaming platform, she exposes far more about herself and her past than she intended to and the internet's toxic power starts firing on all cylinders. Especially when an anonymous male viewer dives into Dell's digital history and threatens to reveal that her sister Daisy's story is more complicated than Dell has been letting on.

Just Watch Me is told in seven tight chapters, one for each day of Dell's livestream. It's a novel about grief, friendship, mothers and daughters, and the art of eating very spicy food.

A sweeping, stunningly ambitious novel about a young Ukrainian girl arriving in Kharkiv in 1930, determined to contribute to the future of her country, and her struggle to survive the devastation and trauma that ravaged Ukraine.

Seventeen-year-old Deborah Rosenbaum, ambitious and in love with literature, arrives in the capital of the new Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, Kharkiv, 1930, to make her own fate as a modern woman. The stale and forbidding ways of the past are out; it's a new dawn, the Soviet era, where skyscrapers go up overnight. Deborah finds work and meets a dashing young officer named Samuel who is training to become a fighter pilot. They fall in love and begin to become part of Ukraine's new cultural elite.

But Deborah's prospects - and Ukraine's - soon dim. Famine rolls through the over-harvested countryside, and any deviation from Moscow-dictated ideology is punished by disappearance: without warning, Samuel is sentenced to ten years' hard labor. Deborah is on her own with a baby. And this is only the beginning. As advancing Nazi armies move through Ukraine during World War II, its yellow fields of wheat run red with blood. Forced to renounce the man she loves, her identity and even her name, Deborah also learns to endure, manipulate, and resist.

No Country for Love follows the hard choices Debora makes as Ukraine, caught between two totalitarian ideologies, turns into the deadliest place in the world - and she has to protect those she loves most.

WITHER

A literary horror novel for readers of Ling Ma's Severance and Jeff VanderMeer's Southern Reach trilogy. What if you did something unforgivable and no one noticed because the world was burning down around you? And when it was time to own up to what you did, what if there was no one left to own up to?

In Wither, Mick Howell has been living off the grid for more than a year. When he finally drags himself home to Bloom, Missouri, he finds a ghost town: cars in driveways and food in the cupboards but the people are long gone and it looks like they left in a hurry. Mick should probably get out of Bloom, too, but he's looking for redemption and ultimately, he's looking for Regression, an algorithmic black box that might have caused a worldwide meltdown.

Wither is told in alternating chapters – 'Now' and 'Then' – that fit together like a Swiss watch. As Mick searches Bloom for the mysterious Regression box, he's confronted by the unfinished business he left behind a year ago: a toxic career data-crunching for a shadowy multinational corporation, a broken relationship with his environmental-activist girlfriend, and a guilty conscience for the tragic mistake he's been running away from. In this very humane novel about alienation, it slowly dawns on Mick that present-day Bloom — as awful as it is — is offering him a chance to atone for his past.

"Funny and sincere...connected by history, by ambition, by a myth of a nation that never manifests but is reborn again and again in the immigrant gaze." —The New York Times Book Review

A sharp, tender, and uproariously funny portrait of the lives of Arab American community members in Dearborn, Michigan.

Spanning several decades, Ghassan Zeineddine's debut collection examines the diverse range and complexities of the Arab American community in Dearborn, Michigan. In ten tragicomic stories, Zeineddine explores themes of identity, generational conflicts, war trauma, migration, sexuality, queerness, home and belonging, and more.

In Dearborn, a father teaches his son how to cheat the IRS and hide their cash earnings inside of frozen chickens. THE HOLLOW HALF: A Memoir of Bodies and Borders

“The Hollow Half catapults every single expectation we have ever had of the memoir genre, and the settled memory. Is it a memoir? It's at least that. But Aziza both longs for and accepts radical tradition and the aches of innovation. The book is body and spirit, full and famished. I'm not sure I've read a book more unafraid of finding free.” —Kiese Laymon, author of *Heavy

A brush with death. An ancestral haunting. A century of family secrets. Sarah Aziza's searing, genre-bending memoir traces three generations of diasporic Palestinians from Gaza to the Midwest to New York City—and back

“You were dead, Sarah, you were dead.” In October 2019, Sarah Aziza, daughter and granddaughter of Gazan refugees, is narrowly saved after being hospitalized for an eating disorder. The doctors revive her body, but it is no simple thing to return to the land of the living. Aziza's crisis is a rupture which brings both her ancestral and personal past into vivid present. The hauntings begin in the hospital cafeteria, when a mysterious incident stirs the taste of Aziza's childhood, and summons the familiar voice of her deceased

Palestinian grandmother.

In the months following, as she responds to a series of ghostly dreams, Aziza unearths family secrets that reveal the ways her own trauma and anorexia echo generations of Palestinian displacement and erasure—and how her fight to recover builds on a century of defiant survival and love. As she moves towards this legacy, Aziza learns to resist the forces of occupation, denial, and patriarchy both within and outside her.

Weaving timelines, languages, geographies, and genres, The Hollow Half probes the contradictions and contingencies that create “nation” and “history.” Blazing with honesty, urgency, and poetry, this stunning debut memoir is a fearless call to imagine both self and world anew.

THE EXPLORERS: A New History of America in Ten Expeditions

“A brilliantly imaginative, beautifully written story about many kinds of frontiers—oceans, mountains, the limits of the sky itself, and above all the nature of the human quest against all manner of odds, including race and gender. From Sacagawea to John Muir to Sally Ride, this book is immensely readable and surprising in its insights.”

—DAVID BLIGHT, Pulitzer Prize-winning author of Frederick Douglass: Prophet of Freedom

The archetype of the American explorer, a rugged white man, has dominated our popular culture since the late eighteenth century, when Daniel Boone’s autobiography captivated readers with tales of treacherous journeys. But our commonly held ideas about American exploration do not tell the whole story—far from it.

The Explorers rediscovers a diverse group of Americans who went to the western frontier and beyond, traversing the farthest reaches of the globe and even penetrating outer space in their endeavor to find the unknown. Many escaped from lives circumscribed by racism, sexism, poverty, and discrimination as they took on great risk in unfamiliar territory. Born into slavery, James Beckwourth found freedom as a mountain man and became one of the great entrepreneurs of Gold Rush California. Matthew Henson, the son of African American sharecroppers, left rural Maryland behind to seek the North Pole. Women like Harriet Chalmers Adams ascended Peruvian mountains to gain geographic knowledge while Amelia Earhart and Sally Ride shattered glass ceilings by pushing the limits of flight.

In The Explorers, readers will travel across the vast Great Plains and into the heights of the Sierra Nevada mountains; they will traverse the frozen Arctic Ocean and descend into the jungles of South America; they will journey by canoe and horseback, train and dogsled, airplane and space shuttle. Readers will experience the exhilarating history of American exploration alongside the men and women who shared a deep drive to discover the unknown.

Across two centuries and many thousands of miles of terrain, Amanda Bellows offers an ode to our country’s most intrepid adventurers—and reveals the history of America in the process.

SHADE: The Promise of a Forgotten Natural Resource

An extraordinary investigation into shade, bringing together science, history, urban design, and social justice to change the way we think about a critical natural resource that should be available to all.

On a 90-degree day in Los Angeles, bus riders across the city line up behind the shadows cast by street signs and telephone poles, looking for a little relief from the sun's glaring heat. Every summer such scenes play out in cities across the United States, and as Sam Bloch argues, we ignore the benefits of shade at our own peril. Heatwaves are now the country's deadliest natural disasters with victims concentrated in poorer, less shady areas. Public health, mental health, and crime statistics are worse in neighborhoods without it. For some, finding shade is a matter of life and death.

Shade was once a staple of human civilization. In Mesopotamia and Northern Africa, cities were built densely so that courtyards and public passageways were in shadow in the heat of the day, with cool breezes flowing freely. The Greeks famously philosophized in shady agoras. Even today, in Spain's sunny Seville, political careers are imperiled when leaders fail to put out the public shades that hang above sidewalks in time for summer heat

So what happened in the U.S.? The arrival of air conditioning and the dominance of cars took away the impetus to enshrine shade into our rapidly growing cities. Though a few heroic planners, engineers, and architects developed shady designs for efficiency and comfort, the removal of shade trees in favor of wider roads and underinvestment in public spaces created a society where citizens retreat to their own cooled spaces, if they can—increasingly taxing the energy grid—or face dangerous heat outdoors.

Shade examines the key role that shade plays not only in protecting human health and enhancing urban life, but also looks toward the ways that innovative architects, city leaders, and climate entrepreneurs are looking to revive it to protect vulnerable people—and maybe even save the planet. Ambitious and far-reaching, Shade helps us see a crucially important subject in a new light.

FREEDOM'S GATE:

The Political Friendships of Maya Angelou, Lorraine Hansberry, Abbey Lincoln, Miriam Makeba, and Nina Simone — How a Basement Stage in Greenwich Village Helped Bring the Civil Rights Movement Alive in America

Before Maya Angelou, Lorraine Hansberry, Abbey Lincoln, Miriam Makeba, and Nina Simone became household names, they needed a place to plot, plan, and practice. That place was the Village Gate, a nightclub opened in 1958 by Art D'Lugoff, a white leftwing Brooklynite who broke into the music business promoting Pete Seeger concerts. The Gate became something that no one could have ever anticipated—a community center, laboratory, venue, and safe haven, where Black art, culture, music, and politics mixed and mingled in the most powerful, sustaining ways. Freedom's Gate will be the first book to explore the friendships, works of art, and political projects of this highly influential group of Black female artists, who found a home there.

Set during the classical phase of the Civil Rights movement (1958-1965), Freedom's Gate will reveal how live art and performance formed a hugely vital wing of Black freedom struggles—not only by giving voice and body to demands for equality (Simone's "Mississippi Goddam," Lincoln and husband Max Roach's "We Insist! Freedom Now Suite"), but also by raising money and awareness for groups fighting on the front lines (Angelou's "Cabaret for Freedom" at the Village Gate donated proceeds to Martin Luther King's SCLC). Structured around the groundbreaking and iconic performances at the Gate (culminating in D'Lugoff and Simone taking the show on the road to Alabama in the wake of Bloody Sunday), the book will follow the five women's relationships, the deepening of their political consciousness, and their rise to fame and all the challenges and opportunities that it brought. All the while these women anticipated the cries for Black Power and third-wave feminism that came later in the decade and beyond.

Freedom's Gate will spotlight each artist's individual accomplishments but also the larger movement they formed when they were together—how they nurtured, pushed, and held one another. This book will bring to life this critical moment in our history, finally giving these women their proper due as artists, intellectuals, and activists.

WHAT IS WRONG WITH MEN: Patriarchy, the Crisis of Masculinity, and How (Of Course) Michael Douglas Films Explain Everything

“Using one actor's filmography as a codex, Jessa Crispin has done what so many sociologists, psychologists, and other experts have not been able to: clearly, shrewdly locate the origins of our ongoing ‘man crisis’ not in feminism but in rampant, extractive capitalism. In Douglas's leading men, Crispin finds a timeline of the bait-and-switch that hollowed out American masculinity, leaving in place the old ideals, but not the opportunities.” —Andi Zeisler, author of *We Were Feminists Once

A hilarious, ambitious work of trenchant cultural criticism that traces the origins of today's crisis of masculinity through . . . Michael Douglas's oeuvre from the eighties and nineties

How to be a Man? That question—and all the anxiety, anger, and resentment it stirs up—is the starting point for a crisis in masculinity that today manifests as misogyny, nativism, and corporate greed; gives rise to incels and mass shooters; and leads to panic over the rights of women and minorities. According to Jessa Crispin, it is the most important question of our time, and the answer to it might be found in an unlikely place: the films of Michael Douglas.

In the 1980s, the rules for masculinity began to change. The goal was no longer to be a good, respectable family man, carrying on the patriarchal traditions of generations past. Not only was it becoming unfashionable, but increasingly difficult: the economic and political shifts—a slashed social safety net, globalization—made it harder to find a breadwinning income, a stable home life, and a secure place in the public sphere. So, then, how to be a man? From the early eighties to the late nineties, Michael Douglas showed us how: he was our president, our Wall Street overlord, our mass shooter, our failed husband, our midlife crisis, our cop, and our canary in the patriarchal coal mine. His characters were a mirror of our cultural shift, serving as the foundation for everything from the 1994 Crime Bill to Trump's ultimate rise. With wry wit and wisdom, Crispin examines the phenomenon of the Michael Douglas character as a silver-screen seismograph registering the tectonic movements within our society that have fractured it in shocking ways.

Blending feminist arguments and pop culture criticism, Crispin uses the iconic roles of Michael Douglas, from Fatal Attraction to Wall Street to The Game, as a lens to explore men's and our culture's ongoing anxieties around women, money, and power. Ultimately, What Is Wrong with Men reveals that the patriarchy has now fully betrayed men, along with everyone else and shows how unpacking one of its most fervent icons can help us envision a pathway forward.

Matthew Gavin Frank SUBMERSED: Wonder, Obsession, and Murder in the World of Amateur Submarines

"Submersed might be the scariest book I've ever read: I can feel little bubbles of panic float up in me if I just imagine stepping onto an amateur submarine. But I'll follow an essayist like Matthew Gavin Frank anywhere, and he's crafted an exceptional journey into the down deep, beautifully examining 'the nagging drive to embed the body into a balloon-like enclosure and float alongside the fishes.' Reading this book, I felt rearranged at an atomic level. What a gift." —Kristen Radtke, author of *Seek You: A Journey Through American Loneliness

An exquisite, lyrical foray into the world of deep-sea divers, the obsession and madness that oceans inspire in us, and the story of submarine inventor Peter Madsen's murder of journalist Kim Wall—a captivating blend of literary prose, science writing, and true crime

Submersed begins with an investigation into the beguiling subculture of DIY submersible obsessives: men and women—but mostly men—who are so compelled to sink into the deep sea that they become amateur backyard submarine-builders. Should they succeed in fashioning a craft in their garage or driveway and set sail, they do so at great personal risk—as the 2023 fatal implosion of Stockton Rush's much more highly funded submarine, Titan, proved to the world.

Matthew Gavin Frank explores the origins of the human compulsion to sink to depth, from the diving bells of Aristotle and Alexander the Great to the Confederate H. L. Hunley, which became the first submersible to sink an enemy warship before itself being sunk during the Civil War. The deeper he plunges, however, the more the obsession seems to dovetail with more threatening traits. Following the grisly murder of journalist Kim Wall at the hands of eccentric entrepreneur Peter Madsen aboard his DIY midget submarine, Frank finds himself reckoning with obsession's darkest extremes.

Weaving together elements of true crime, the strange history of the submarine, the mythology of the deep sea, and the physical and mental side effects of sinking to great depth, Frank attempts to get to the bottom of this niche compulsion to chase the extreme in our planet's bodies of water and in our own bodies. What he comes to discover, and interrogate, are the odd and unexpected overlaps between the unquenchable human desire to descend into deep water, and a penchant for unspeakable violence.

MADAME COMPOSER: Clara Schumann's Genius and the Creation of the Classical Canon

History has not been kind to Clara Weick. She's remembered solely in relation to the men in her life—wife of Robert Schumann, muse to Johannes Brahms—and if the music she wrote is performed then it's in a perfunctory way, the token woman on an evening's program. This is a travesty. Fortunately, Madame Composer will finally right the historical wrong. It will be the first book to show that Clara was a canon-worthy compositional genius and that she helped form, through her advocacy of the music she admired, the classical canon as we know it today. Indeed, she helped establish the very idea that classical music, like poetry and theater, was an art form worthy of a canon at all.

When Wolfgang von Goethe saw ten-year-old Clara perform he said she played the piano “with the strength of six boys.” She was soon composing complex and influential orchestral works, and at the age of eighteen, the Austrian Emperor named her imperial virtuoso, catapulting her to unparalleled fame. Clara was the first to program Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms in one concert, at a time when most regarded Beethoven as just another contemporary composer, Bach as boring, and Brahms “ugly trash.” Over the course of her thousands of sold-out piano concerts from London to Moscow during a sixty-year career, she popularized some of the greatest works by the Three Bs, as well as those by Chopin, Mendelssohn, and her husband, Robert.

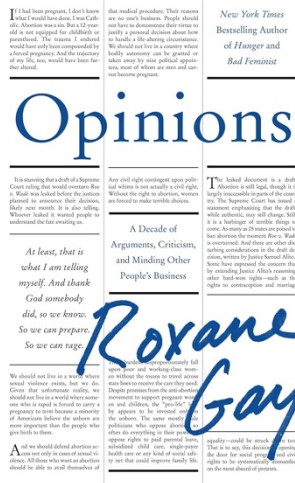

Clara was a nineteenth-century influencer who commanded near-religious respect when Romantic music, and German culture, was still in its infancy. Clara donned the veils of dutiful daughter, wife, and muse to mask the power she wielded, a woman who led a cultural movement during “War of the Romantics” against her rivals Liszt and Richard Wagner who dubbed Enlightenment Era forms—like symphonies and sonatas—dead art. Without Clara Schumann, many of history's best-loved musical works would have been buried, or never written at all.

What will emerge in Madame Composer—through rich, novelistic prose befitting Clara's more-dramatic-than-fiction life—is one of the great Romantic and relatable figures who's never been given her due: Clara was a composer of enormous brilliance who battled society's and her own internalized misogyny. She struggled with depression, anxiety, and imposter syndrome, at once deeply desiring to be a good mother and wife, while fervently needing to create lasting art. And when her alcoholic and unstable husband first leaped into the Rhine and then died in an asylum, she became a single mother at thirty-four: with no time or peace to compose anymore, she once again started touring to support herself—and her six children!

TAKE THE WATERS: The Transformative Power of Our Oldest Ritual

As long as there have been humans, we have gathered together by rivers and hot springs, oceans and lakes, to cleanse and sweat, rejuvenate and relax. Ancient Greeks bathed to purify themselves before entering a temple; ancient Chinese physicians prescribed cold-water swimming to cure illnesses. Bathing took us closer to God and further from disease.

But over the past hundred years, communal bathing rituals have dried up in the Western world. Where there were once dozens of floating, naked people laughing, fighting, and praying, today a lone individual stands below a shower head and luminescent light. Indoor plumbing is a sign of material progress, sure, but what is lost when people's relationship with nature is frayed and when sacred rituals have been reduced to questions of convenience and profit?

Drawing on deep, original reporting, the latest science and psychology, as well as historical archives, Take the Waters will explore bathing cultures around the world, revealing how elemental bathing is to the human experience: in water, we remove sin and stink; in steam, we sweat and hallucinate; at bathhouses, we find camaraderie and love. With rich character-based storytelling, Take the Waters will bring readers on a journey around the world to meet individuals who are protecting their cultures' bathing rituals. We will sweat in the hammams of Morocco; we will wade into the polluted but holy waters of the Ganges; and we will wash in the historic bathhouses of San Francisco.

By looking at how economic liberalization and climate change are undermining bathing rituals, Take the Waters will make the case that in an ever-polarized, ever-polluted, and ever-lonely world, protecting communal traditions, like bathing, might be what we need to bring us closer together and make us healthier, whether that's joining a cold-water club that takes the plunge to relieve depression or taking your daily baths with people of all ages at a sentō bathhouse in Japan.

What James Nestor did for breathing, Matthew Walker for sleeping, and James Hamblin for cleaning, Take the Waters will do for bathing, appealing directly to readers of Bonnie Tsui's roving Why We Swim and Caitlin Doughty's A-Z on burial, From Here to Eternity. Take the Waters will change the way we think about our relationship to water and our bodies—and why it demands our attention once again.

BIRD CITY: Surprising Adventures in New York's Urban Wilds

When you think of New York City, or any city for that matter, what are the first things that come to mind? Chances are “birds” aren’t landing in the top ten. 250 square miles of concrete, 6,000 miles of roads, more than a million buildings, at least three million cars, and almost nine million people—all that doesn’t seem super compatible with nature and animals. That’s what Ryan Goldberg thought, too. That is until he opened his eyes to what was there all along.

By taking a bird’s-eye view of this city and others like it—around 80% of Americans today live in urban areas—this book will argue we can fundamentally, at a critical point in human history, alter the way we see ourselves and our own habitats. Anchored in the ecological themes of cohabitation, conservation, reclamation, and reparation, Bird City will speak to issues of human-wildlife adaptation in a world of growing urbanization and rapid climate change.

Did you know: New York sits on a terminal moraine—the southern reach of the Labrador ice sheet some 12,000 years ago—and therefore its plant life exists at a crossroads, between the northern flora of the boreal forest and the southern flora of Virginia and the Carolinas. For this reason, migratory birds have traveled through New York on a key flyway since at least the Battle of Thermopylae. What’s more, all the skyscrapers and concrete you’d think would keep birds away from the city actually funnels them into its greenspaces—a phenomenon known as the Central Park effect—and creates a totally unique and enticing environment for birds.

Broken into four seasons across the span of a year, Ryan will take readers to the ordinary and extraordinary spaces where birds flock, as well as the passionate and eccentric people who love them. In winter, Ryan will take us uptown to meet the city’s peregrine falcons, the largest urban population in the world; they’ve become so well-adapted to life in our concrete jungle that some believe they should be their own subspecies: Falco peregrinus urbanii. In the summer, we’ll meet the birds who frequent the largest grasslands in the state of New York, the thousand-acre Freshkills Park in Staten Island—the city’s smallest, wildest borough—which was built on top of 150 million tons of garbage.

Filled with excitement, delight, and a sense of awe, this book will make readers, whether they’re in the biggest cities or small towns, go outside and discover a whole world hiding in plain sight. In the vein of Jennifer Ackerman’s The Genius of Birds, Michael Pollan’s Second Nature, and Robert Macfarlane’s Underland, Bird City will change the way you see the world and help you rethink how we as a species can live more fully and consciously on this shared planet.

QUEEN OF ALL MAYHEM: The Blood-Soaked Life & Mysterious Death of Belle Starr, the Most Dangerous Woman in the West

“Huckelbridge has conjured up one heck of a Wild West tale about a ‘whiskey-drinking, horse-thieving, gunslinging double widow’ that is chock-full of Western lore and nasty desperadoes. . . . The elusive, colorful story of a rare outlaw, told with brio..” —Kirkus Reviews

A riveting, deeply researched, blood-on-the-spurs biography of Belle Starr, the most legendary female outlaw of the American West.

On February 3, 1889, just two days shy of her forty-first birthday, Myra Maybelle Shirley—better known at that point by her outlaw sobriquet “Belle Starr”—was blown from her horse saddle and killed by a pair of shotgun blasts, delivered by an unseen assailant, only a few miles away from her home in the Indian Territory of present-day Oklahoma. Thus ended the life of one of the most colorful, authentic, and dangerous women in the history of the American West.

While today’s household names like Annie Oakley and Calamity Jane had dubious criminal bona fides, Belle’s were not in any doubt. She led a gang of horse thieves—a very serious crime in an era when horses were often the basis of one’s livelihood; was romantically involved with two of the West’s most legendary outlaws, Cole Younger and Jim Reed, who became her first husband; participated in stickups and robberies across present-day Texas and Oklahoma; and sheltered Jesse James in her home at Younger’s Bend. When Reed was murdered, Belle crossed into Indian territory, where she assimilated into the Cherokee tribe, a matrilineal society, and soon married Sam Starr, a direct descendant of Nanye’hi, the greatest female warrior in Cherokee history.

Dane Huckelbridge, acclaimed author of No Beast So Fierce, probes a life rich in contradictions and intrigue. Why did a woman who had considerable advantages in life—a good family, a decent education, solid marriage prospects, a clear path to financial security—choose to pursue a life of crime? The life of Belle Starr is one of almost endless trauma: the horrors of the Civil War, which destroyed her hometown and killed her beloved brother, Bud; the untimely deaths of her first two husbands, both of them murdered; a stint in Detroit’s notorious women’s prison. Her career coincided with those of Susan B. Anthony and Elizabeth Cady Stanton, and yet Belle Starr was a very different sort of feminist icon.

Queen of All Mayhem is a triumph of biography, revealing one of the most-mythologized figures of Western lore as she truly was.

EDGE OF THE WORLD: An Anthology

"Each of these incredibly vulnerable and beautifully written essays remind us that our identities can affect where we go, who we are expected to be in those spaces, and that beauty (and heartache) can be found almost everywhere." —De'Shawn Charles Winslow, author of In West Mills and Decent People

The first inclusive LGBTQ+ travel anthology, Edge of the World explores what it means to be a queer person moving through the world.

These lively essays by luminary writers offer a queer perspective on how people experience other cultures and how other cultures receive queer people. This anthology showcases the travel writing of both established and emerging authors across a wide age spectrum to address these central questions. Contributors include Alexander Chee, Edmund White, Daisy Hernández, Putsata Reang, Alex Marzano-Lesnevich, Garrard Conley, Nicole Shawan Junior, and many more, taking the reader to different areas of the world including the Netherlands, Ukraine, Mexico, Cambodia, Russia, Senegal, Berlin, Paris, and the United States.

Alexander Chee is betrayed by his boyfriend in Spain but learns how to reflect on all he loved about the time they spent in Granada regardless. Daisy Hernández brings her nonbinary partner to meet her elderly Cuban father in Miami, and for days wonders if she can bring herself to correct her father when he calls her partner her "husband." Alex-Marzano-Lesnevich, newly in New Orleans and stopped by a police officer for kissing their girlfriend on the street, must choose between walking towards or away from a fight.

In addition to favorite voices from the queer American canon, Edge of the World introduces emerging writers Zoë Sprankle as she follows her heart into the mayhem of New York Pride, Sara Orozco as she is arrested during a raid on a South Carolina gay club during the AIDS-era panic, and Calvin Gimpelevich as he makes two trips to Berlin in search of a queer utopia.

REBELLION OR OBLIVION: Fighting in the Age of Climate Catastrophe

The facts: 2023 was the hottest year in our planet’s history, with the highest recorded sea surface temperatures, the highest daily global temperature anomaly, the lowest Antarctic sea-ice extent, and the greatest gain in sea level rise. Still, our world leaders do little more than “blah blah blah”—in Greta Thunberg’s memorable estimation—while we, too, sit idle. Well, not all of us. Rebellion or Oblivion will be the first book to take readers inside the minds of the growing numbers of men and women, old and young, who are taking direct action against our fossil-fueled society’s mad march to the precipice.

With his signature blend of on-the-ground Gonzo reporting, deep understanding of the environmental and climate crisis, and personal-but-not-uncomplicated sympathy for his subjects, Christopher will introduce readers to Roger Hallam, a contentious and controversial 57-year-old organic farmer in the U.K. who founded Extinction Rebellion, the largest group of climate rebels in the world; Jessica Reznicek, a mettlesome Catholic Worker now imprisoned for actions against the Dakota Access Pipeline; Alizée Le Fur, a 23-year-old Parisian graduate of business school who has inspired others in her unflinching attempts to disrupt everyday life; a resolute group of Indigenous resisters who occupied a stretch of remote Nevada desert called Thacker Pass to stop a lithium mining project; and many other ecological rebels. Christopher will also narrate, in a riveting true-crime narrative, his own fraught encounter with a lone-wolf eco-saboteur in the Southwest that landed him on the radar of the FBI.

Rebellion or Oblivion will argue that what seem to be small and disparate groups are, in fact, part of an incipient whole, marking the beginning of true and necessary climate rebellion. These people and networks represent the vanguard of humanity who have set for themselves a radical, sober goal: disrupt Western society on such a scale that governments are forced to act—and to act in such a way that will demand unprecedented social and economic change as well as an uncommon sacrifice not unlike that during wartime. Drawing on his subjects and experts, Christopher will make the case that the only thing that might save us from civilizational self-destruction is the replacement of ecocidal growth-based capitalism with a quixotic—perhaps naively utopian—“degrowth” model. Armed with the latest science and buttressed by ecological models, theories of political change, philosophies of degrowth, and novelistic narratives of unforgettable characters, Rebellion or Oblivion will be the defining book of the dawning age of climate revolt.

EVERY VALLEY: The Desperate Lives and Troubled Times That Made Handel's Messiah

“Ecstatic, affecting, entirely weird, Handel’s ‘Messiah’ indeed seems — as a listener wrote after its 1742 Dublin debut — ‘a species of music different from any other.’ With brio, Charles King pulls aside the curtain behind the work, to reveal the scandal and intrigue, opportunists and thugs, deep pain and soaring optimism, that Handel transmuted, in less than a month, into a sublime 130 pages. A book of power and glory, brimming with emotion and dazzling in its reach.” —Stacy Schiff, author of Pulitzer Prize-winning *Vera

From New York Times bestselling historian and National Book Critics Circle Award finalist Charles King, the moving untold story of the eighteenth-century men and women behind the making of Handel’s Messiah

George Frideric Handel’s Messiah is arguably the greatest piece of participatory art ever created. Adored by millions, it is performed each year by renowned choirs and orchestras, as well as by audiences singing along with the words on their cell phones.

But this work of triumphant joy was born in a worried age. Britain in the early Enlightenment was a place of astonishing creativity but also the seat of an empire mired in war, enslavement, and conflicts over everything from the legitimacy of government to the meaning of truth. Against this turbulent background, prize-winning author Charles King has crafted a cinematic drama of the troubled lives that shaped a masterpiece of hope.

Every Valley presents a depressive dissenter stirred to action by an ancient prophecy; an actress plagued by an abusive husband and public scorn; an Atlantic sea captain and penniless philanthropist; and an African Muslim man held captive in the American colonies and hatching a dangerous plan for getting back home. At center stage is Handel himself, composer to kings but, at midlife, in ill health and straining to keep an audience’s attention. Set amid royal intrigue, theater scandals, and political conspiracy, Every Valley is entertaining, inspiring, unforgettable.

FEAR NO PHAROAH: American Jews, the Civil War, and the Fight to End Slavery

“Fear No Pharaoh breaks new ground in Civil War history. A superb detective and storyteller, Kreitner not only illuminates the complex lives of nineteenth-century American Jews but also challenges his readers to reflect on the enduring intersection of faith, ethics, and national identity.”—Amanda Foreman, author of A World on Fire and *Georgiana, Duchess of Devonshire

A dramatic history of how American Jews reckoned with slavery—and fought the Civil War.

Since ancient times, the Jewish people have recalled the story of Exodus and reflected on the implications of having been slaves. Did the tradition teach that Jews should speak out against slavery and oppression everywhere, or act cautiously to protect themselves in a hostile world?

In Fear No Pharaoh, the journalist and historian Richard Kreitner sets this question at the heart of the Civil War era. Using original sources, he tells the intertwined stories of six American Jews who helped to shape a tumultuous time, including Judah Benjamin, the brilliant, secretive lawyer who became Jefferson Davis’s trusted confidante; Morris Raphall, a Swedish-born rabbi who defended slavery as biblically justified; and Raphall’s rival rabbis—the celebrated Isaac Mayer Wise, who urged Jews to stay out of the slavery controversy to avoid attracting attention, and David Einhorn, whose fiery sermons condemning bondage led to a pro-slavery mob threatening his life. We also meet August Bondi, a veteran of Europe’s 1848 revolutions, who fought with John Brown in “Bleeding Kansas” and later in the Union Army, and the Polish émigré Ernestine Rose, a feminist, atheist, and abolitionist who championed “emancipation of all kinds.”

As he tracks these characters, Kreitner illuminates the shifting dynamics of Jewish life in America—and the debates about religion, morality, and politics that endure to this day.

THE WALL DANCERS: The Search for Openness, Freedom, and Truth Inside China's Great Firewall

The extraordinary rise of the internet in China and the equally extraordinary attempts to control it by the one-party Communist state, via the Great Firewall, has prompted two dominant narratives to emerge in the Western media: there's China, the rising superpower of unbounded technological growth (unicorn start-ups, smart megacities like Shenzhen, and booming IPOs), and China, the omnipotent techno-authoritarian regime of repressive censorship. The truth, however, is much more complicated—and fascinating—than either reductive trope.

In The Wall Dancers, Yi-Ling will tell the real story of the internet's rise in China and its growing circumscription through the compelling and varied lives of four remarkable individuals who came of age while new ideas flooded the country via the web and who then, just as quickly, had to learn how to “dance with shackles on,” navigating the ever-changing bounds of the Great Firewall, in order to preserve their beliefs and integrity. Rich with innovation, yet constrained by a unique form of oppressive rule, Chinese cyberspace can at once feel like a free-wheeling carnival and a barren cage, filled with fear and ennui but also creativity and potential. There's Kafe Hu, a rapper from Chengdu, part of a new generation of rebellious Sichuanese hip-hop artists, who rose to stardom before hip-hop ran afoul of the online censors; Ma Baoli, a former closeted small-town cop and now the CEO of Blued, the largest gay social-networking app in the world, who carefully advocates for LGBTQ rights without ever becoming an agitator; Lü Pin, known as the godmother of young Chinese feminists, who had fought for gender equality in the patriarchal society before a crackdown sent her into exile, where she continues her organizing online; and Chen Qiufan, the burnt-out tech-worker turned sought-after science-fiction novelist.

These Wall Dancers, different in their backgrounds and ambitions, have learned to live, work, love, and express themselves in a society where the lines of permissibility can change from week to week. As Chinese cyberspace expands beyond China's borders, and as systems of digital control like the Great Firewall become pervasive in autocracies and democracies across the world, this is a skill that all of us will have to learn in the decades to come. Someday, and soon, we may all have to become Wall Dancers.

READY FOR MY CLOSEUP: The Making of Sunset Boulevard and the Dark Side of Hollywood

"Sunset Boulevard belongs in the Hollywood pantheon, alongside such classics as Chinatown and The Wizard of Oz, both of which have deservedly received their own "biographies." Now David Lubin gives Sunset its due with this fast-paced journey through the making of the movie, sprinkling his well-researched tale with rich nuggets about the Golden Age. Anyone who admires Billy Wilder, adores William Holden and is mesmerized by Gloria Swanson will hunger for more."

—Stephen Galloway, New York Times bestselling author of *Truly, Madly

Today, more than 70 years after it premiered, Sunset Boulevard remains the finest ever movie made about the pathology of fame: those who lose it, those who abuse it, and those who never attain it at all.

Great films are born of great collaborations, and Sunset Boulevard represents one of the most extraordinary confluences of cinematic talent in film history, but its production was surprisingly fraught, filled with unexpected twists. Why was

William Holden, who had never caught fire as a leading man, hired to play Joe Gillis after the fastest-rising star in the business dropped out at the last minute? After Mae West and Mary Pickford turned down the now iconic role of Norma Desmond, how did Billy Wilder convince Gloria Swanson, who had long been absent from Hollywood at this point, to leave her low-paying job as a TV talk show host to join the cast? From the writers' room during Billy Wilder and Charles Brackett's final collaboration to the moment when the film won three Academy Awards, scholar and former Rolling Stone staffer David M. Lubin takes readers on a fascinating journey through film history that proves, once and for all, why Sunset Boulevard is one of the most iconic films in cinematic history.

By exploring the history of Sunset Boulevard in time for the movie's 75th anniversary, from its inception to its making to its present-day legacy, Ready for My Closeup breathes life into a beloved masterpiece of American cinema, not only marking its influential place in film history, but also proving how prescient it really was in terms of the human costs of relentless technological change and our obsessive quest for fame, youth, and immortality.

EMPRESSES OF SEVENTH AVENUE: World War II, New York City, and the Birth of American Fashion

"Confident and approachable, like the pioneering American women MacDonnell describes, Empresses of Seventh Avenue is more than a scrupulously-researched source for anyone interested in fashion. The lives of these pioneering figures and their myriad of talents and aesthetics are crafted by MacDonnell the way a florist blends an exuberantly expansive assemblage of disparate blooms—from hothouse orchids to humble wildflowers—and places them in a compelling literary narrative that is as clear and lucid as a cut crystal vase." —Patricia Mears deputy director of The Museum at the Fashion Institute of Technology

In the tradition of The Barbizon and The Girls of Atomic City, fashion historian and journalist Nancy MacDonnell chronicles the untold story of how the Nazi invasion of France gave rise to the American fashion industry.

Calvin Klein. Ralph Lauren. Donna Karan. Halston. Marc Jacobs. Tom Ford. Michael Kors. Tory Burch. Today, American designers are some of the biggest names in fashion, yet before World War II, they almost always worked anonymously. The industry, then centered on Seventh Avenue in Manhattan, had always looked overseas for "inspiration"—a polite phrase for what was often blatant copying—because style, as all the world knew, came from Paris.

But when the Nazis invaded France in 1940, the capital of fashion was cut off from the rest of the world. The story of the chaos and tragedy that followed has been told many times—but how it directly affected American fashion is largely unknown.

Defying the naysayers, New York-based designers, retailers, editors, and photographers met the moment, turning out clothes that were perfectly suited to the American way of life: sophisticated, modern, comfortable, and affordable. By the end of the war, "the American Look" had been firmly established as a fresh, easy elegance that combined function with style. But none of it would have happened without the influence and ingenuity of a small group of women who have largely been lost to history.

Empresses of Seventh Avenue will tell the story of how these extraordinary women put American fashion on the world stage and created the template for modern style—and how the nearly $500 billion American fashion industry, the largest in the world, could not have accrued its power and wealth without their farsightedness and determination.

WE LOVED IT ALL

“Magic words, beautiful thoughts, an altogether unique book that allows you to watch a gorgeous mind at work. There is, quite apart from the magic of her writing, not a single page where you won't learn something new. We Loved it All will leave you breathless.” —Jeffrey Moussaieff Masson, author of Lost Companions and *When Elephants Weep

A personal evocation of the glory of nature, our vexed position in the animal kingdom, and the difficulty of adoring what we destroy.

Acclaimed novelist Lydia Millet's first work of nonfiction, We Loved It All, is a genre-defying tour de force that makes an impassioned argument for people to see their emotional and spiritual lives as infinitely dependent on the lives of nonhuman beings. Drawing on a quarter-century of experience as an advocate for endangered species at the Center for Biological Diversity, Millet offers intimate portraits of what she calls “the others”—the extraordinary animals with whom we still share the world, along with those already lost. Humans, too, fill this book, as Millet touches on the lives of her world-traveling parents, fascinating partners and friends, and colorful relatives, from diplomats to nut farmers—all figures in the complex tapestry each of us weaves with the surrounding world. Written in the tradition of Annie Dillard or Robert Macfarlane, We Loved It All is an incantatory work that will appeal to anyone concerned about the future of life on earth—including our own.

PRETEND WE'RE DEAD: The Rise, Fall, and Resurrection of Women in Rock in the '90s

"A refreshing and much-needed contribution to the male-dominated history of rock 'n' roll." --Kirkus Reviews

From the founder of the Women of Rock Oral History Project, an exploration of women in the '90s rock scene, featuring original interviews with Liz Phair, Shirley Manson, Kristin Hersh, Donita Sparks, Tanya Donelly, members of Hole, Luscious Jackson, Veruca Salt, Babes in Toyland, and more

In 2018, during an interview with journalist Tanya Pearson, Shirley Manson lamented: "It's a blanket fact that after September 11th, nonconformist women were taken off the radio." This comment echoed a reality Pearson had personally witnessed as a musician and a fan, and launched her into a quest to figure out just what happened to these extraordinary female figures.

Pretend We're Dead seeks to answer two big questions: First, where did all these wildly different, politically conscious, and supremely talented women in rock come from in the 1990s? And second, after their unprecedented breakout, why did they vanish from the mainstream by the early aughts? Along with analysis and narrative, Pretend We're Dead is built on exclusive interviews with the unfiltered voices of legends including: Shirley Manson, Melissa Auf der Maur, Patty Schemel, Kate Schellenbach, Nina Gordon, Louise Post, Josephine Wiggs, Tanya Donelly, Kristin Hersh, Tracy Bonham, Donita Sparks, Liz Phair, Zia McCabe, Tracy Bonham, Lori Barbero, Josephine Wiggs, and Jill Emery. Through thought-provoking conversations, these women explore how they fell in love with music and started bands; fought labels, their coverage in the media, and sexism; and wrote deeply political and feminist music. Readers also learn about the effects of Woodstock '99, the corporatization of the music industry, the rise of Clear Channel and its ties to the Bush administration, and finally the nationalist sentiment after 9/11.

While sonically diverse, these musicians all wrote fierce, socially conscious, feminist lyrics, and Pretend We're Dead commemorates and celebrates the overlooked contributions of true trailblazers.

Hannah Pittard WE ARE TOO MANY

“Hannah Pittard’s We Are Too Many is a truly lacerating exploration of the betrayals that make a marriage. The book is a dagger-like dialogue between husband and wife, wife and best friend, but ultimately the conversation is between Hannah’s selves – some of them self-destructive, some despairing, some hopeful - who must rebuild. We Are Too Many will leave you stunned and tender.” —Stephanie Danler, New York Times bestselling author of Sweetbitter

An unexpectedly funny, unflinchingly honest, and genre-bending memoir about a marriage-ending affair between the author’s husband and her captivating best friend

In this wryly humorous and innovative look at a marriage gone wrong, Hannah Pittard recalls a decade’s worth of unforgettable conversations, beginning with the one in which she discovers her husband has been having sex with her charismatic best friend, Trish. These time-jumping exchanges are fast-paced, intimate, and often jaw-dropping in their willingness to reveal the vulnerabilities inherent in any friendship or marriage. Blending fact and fiction, sometimes re-creating exchanges with extreme accuracy and sometimes diving headlong into pure speculation, Pittard takes stock not only of her own past and future but also of the larger, more universal experiences they connect with—from the depths of female rage to the heartbreaking ways we inevitably outgrow certain people.

Clever and bold and radically honest to an unthinkable degree, We Are Too Many examines the ugly, unfiltered parts of the female experience, as well as the many (happier) possibilities in starting any life over after a major personal catastrophe.

US/Canada: Holt (May 2023)

Hannah Pittard was born in Atlanta. She is the author of four novels, including Listen to Me and The Fates Will Find Their Way. Her work has appeared in the Sewanee Review, the New York Times, and other publications. Christina Rivera
MY OCEANS

"This collection is threaded with wonder, history, and heartache. In My Oceans, motherhood is not sentimentalized but shown as a transformative political power. Masterfully constructed and beautifully written, this book dwells in the depths—not only of oceans but of mourning, awe, anger, and action." —Beth Piatote, author of *The Beadworkers: Stories

An urgent exploration of caring and mothering on a planet in crisis

In a swell of sea-linked essays, Christina Rivera explores the kinship between marine animals, humans, and Earth's blue womb. Rivera's investigative questions begin with the toxic burden of her body and spiral out—to a grieving orca, a hunted manta ray, a pregnant sea turtle, a spawning salmon, an "endling" porpoise, and the "mother culture" of sperm whales—as she redefines what it means to mother and defend a collective future.

Braiding memoir with embodied climate science, Rivera challenges that it's not anthropomorphism to feel deep connection to nonhuman species and proposes that gathering in collective grief is essential amid the sixth mass extinction. For ecofeminists, fans of Rachel Carson and Terry Tempest Williams—and for anyone who feels themselves disintegrate in the presence of the sea—My Oceans offers a timely and wondrous descent into the deep waters of interconnection in which we swim.

World English: Curbstone Press/Northwestern University (March 2025)

Christina Rivera is a Pushcart Prize-winning essayist, author, and environmental writer. Her debut book, My Oceans, is a sea-linked collection of essays that weaves immersive storytelling with embodied climate science and explores the oceanic kinship of bodies of water and beings. Christina's essays have been published at Orion, The Cut, Terrain, The Kenyon Review, River Teeth's Beautiful Things, and her work has won the John Burroughs Nature Essay Award—the highest annual honor for a creative nonfiction essay on place, science, and the environment. My Oceans was longlisted for the Graywolf Prize, a finalist for the Siskiyou Prize for New Environmental Literature, and is published by Northwestern University Press.

After immersing herself in the fast-paced world of advertising and marketing in the heart of New York City for a decade, Francesca Sipma embarked on a global quest to find her higher purpose. This universal though often-ignored inner need to fulfill one’s destiny took her around the world to India, Peru, and Bali where she experienced a revelation that would change her life forever: the profound power of conscious breathwork.

Conscious breathing creates theta waves in the brain. Utilizing its effects, Sipma developed HypnoBreathwork, which deploys the power of hypnotic suggestion and visualization to rewire the mind. Unblock Your Purpose presents a tangible and accessible process to identify old habits, clear blocks, and achieve ultimate fulfillment. Built on the wisdom Sipma has gleaned from her mentors and research as well as the thousands of students she’s led through breakthroughs, this guide explores how to:

- recognize and overcome emotional blockages created by childhood conditioning, societal expectations, and repressed emotions
- rewire limiting beliefs around self-doubt, fear, perfectionism, and procrastination
- tap into a flow state anytime, unlocking creativity and enhancing performance, problem-solving, and energy

Blending spirituality with the modern business world, science with emotion, logic with intuition, and surrender with discipline, Sipma’s debut book is a radical and accessible guide to using breathwork to achieve flow and discover one’s purpose for wealth and success.

Amanda Uhle DESTROY THIS HOUSE

“In Destroy This House, Amanda Uhle turns her gimlet eye as a journalist towards her own family—deciphering what truths existed about her parents, two people who used lies as currency. Filled with warmth and sharp humor, this poignant memoir celebrates how the best stories don’t need to be true, but that the truth is always worth seeking out.” —Isaac Fitzgerald, author of Dirtbag, Massachusetts

For fans of The Glass Castle and The Liars’ Club, a tender, heartbreaking, and hilarious memoir chronicling the challenges of growing up with a desperately scheming father, a mother plagued by an acute hoarding disorder, and parenting parents while seeking independence.

The Long family’s love was fierce, their lifestyle bizarre, and their deceptions countless. Once her parents were gone, Amanda Uhle realized she was closer to them than anyone else, yet she found herself utterly confounded by the lives they had led.

Amanda’s striving fashion designer mother and her charismatic wheeler-dealer father wove a complex life together that spanned ten different homes across five states over forty perplexing years. Throughout her childhood, as her mother’s hoarding disorder flourished and her father’s schemes crumbled, contradictions abounded. They bartered for dental surgery and drove their massive Lincoln Town Car to the food bank. When financial ruin struck, they abandoned their repossessed mansion for humble parish housing, and Amanda’s father became a preacher. They swung between being filthy rich and dirt poor, devious and virtuous, lonely and loved, fake and real.

In Destroy This House, Amanda sets out to document her parents’ unbelievable exploits and her own hard-won escape into independence. With humor and tenderness, Uhle has crafted a heartfelt and utterly unique memoir, capturing the raucousness, pain, joy, and ultimately, the boundless love that exists between all parents and children.

Emily Meg Weinstein TURN TO STONE

“Weinstein—vulnerable, authentic, and wickedly funny—helps us face what scares us most and find the courage to become the people we are meant to be. This book will be a fixture in every Sprinter van, Subaru and beat-up backpack from Joshua Tree to the Adirondacks and beyond.” —Laurel Braitman, NYT bestselling author of Animal Madness and *What Looks Like Bravery

The first literary memoir of female adventure and becoming that tells its story through the unique lens and specific world of rock climbing.

Few female climbers have published accounts of their experiences, and the ones who have are the superwomen, not the mediocre mortals. This is no epic champion climber’s tale—it is the utterly relatable story of a woman who did something not unimaginable, but merely unexpected, who undertook an extreme sport in an everywoman way, not to blast off from humanity, but to finally find belonging in it.

Both a coming-of-age story and a memoir of sex, angst, and rocks, Turn to Stone is about what Emily gave to climbing, and what climbing gave to her. Beginning with the moment she first ties in, readers are taken on a narrative journey of her decade-long pilgrimage through the tribal subculture and global community of climbers, and the mountains and deserts they roam. Against a tapestry of van-dwellers, anarchists, and Jedi-like “Stonemasters,” the story moves over the disappearing wild places of our troubled land. While Turn to Stone is foremost a memoir about rock climbing, it is also a road story—a rare one that puts a woman in the driver’s seat.

As she collects climbs, gets her own gear, and squeezes a bed in the back of her Subaru, Emily experiences firsthand how this sport can be a place for women to be powerful and independent. She learns to trust herself and connect with others—to claim her wholeness—by fitting her body into broken places in rocks. In her observational, poignant, and deeply funny voice, she comes to see how she has inherited trauma, wounds, and worry from her Jewish family...and how the physical and mental power she is now building both empowers her to protect herself, and liberates her from those inherited fears. Clinging onto the rock, things people once said to her no longer matter. Love and trust and attachment styles don’t matter; marriage and babies don’t matter. All that matters is just holding on. She thought she had escaped to disappear into the rocks, but among the rocks is exactly where she meets herself.

Bailey Williams

HOLLOW: A Memoir of My Body in the Marines

"A visceral, powerful, and illuminating memoir of women, bodies, and the military. Bailey Williams' writes hauntingly of a life dictated by rules, religion, self-destruction, self-harm, and misogyny. Hollow is a necessary and compelling book about girlhood, womanhood, personhood, and what it means to finally crawl from a painful place and begin to build a beautiful, longed-for life." —Kathleen Glasgow, #1 New York Times bestselling author of *Girl in Pieces

A powerful, coming-of-age memoir of one girl's struggle, adrift in warrior culture

At eighteen, Bailey Williams bolted from her strict Mormon upbringing to a Marine recruiting office to enlist as a 2600 — a military linguist. But the first language the Marine Corps taught her wasn't Arabic, Farsi, or Dari. It was how Marines speak to, and about, women. There are only three kinds of women in the Marine Corps, she was told: you can be a bitch, a dyke, or a whore.

Determined to prove she's not whatever it is the men around her believe a woman to be, Private Williams turned to an eating disorder, intending to show her discipline through the visible testament of bone. She ran endurance distances on an increasingly Spartan diet, shoving through her own body's resistance. Pushed to the brink by a leadership and a culture that demands women shrink themselves, she finally looked to the girls around her, and began to wonder what else she's losing. Quietly but inexorably, the power of other women's stories whispered an alternative path to what it means to be a woman, and a warrior.

Hollow is a story for anyone whose identity has been prescribed to them— and has dared question if there is another way to live.

Lidia Yuknavitch READING THE WAVES

"What makes us return to Yuknavitch again and again is her searing honesty, wide-open compassion, and sensual engagement with this earthly realm. This book is a brilliant storytelling of one of our most adventurous creatives.... This is a book you will return to again and again for the wild astuteness of its wisdom." —Joy Harjo, 23rd U.S. Poet Laureate

The frank and revealing memoir of a writer who draws from her own creativity to heal.

"I believe our bodies are carriers of experience," Lidia Yuknavitch writes in her provocative new memoir. "I mean to ask if there is a way to read my own past differently, using what I have learned from literature: how stories repeat and reverberate and release us from the tyranny of our mistakes, our traumas, and our confusions."

Drawing on her background -- her father's abuse, her complicated dynamic with her disabled mother, the death of her child, her sexual relationships with men and women -- and her creative life as an author and teacher, Yuknavitch has come to understand that by using the power of literature and storytelling to reframe her memories, she can loosen the bonds that have enslaved her emotional growth. Armed with this insight, she allows herself to look with the eye of an artist at the wounds she suffered and come to understand the transformational power this has to restore her soul.

By turns candid and lyrical, stoic and forgiving, blunt and evocative, Reading the Waves reframes memory to show how crucial this process can be to gaining a deeper understanding of ourselves.

Shimri Zameret

THE WORLD IS BROKEN

“Zameret is a model of moral leadership for all of us.....I hope you can hear the thunderous applause from every corner of this globe.”
—Judith Butler, author of *Gender Trouble

Is our world broken, and what can we do to fix it? The book The World Is Broken sets out to answer this question.

The book starts from the stories of people who are most affected by the failures of the international system, like a Palestinian peace activist whose ten-year-old daughter was killed by an Israeli soldier, or a Filipino climate change diplomat whose brother disappeared in a superstorm.

Building on these stories, The World Is Broken looks at the systems humanity created to address global warming, economic crises, international pandemics, and war and terrorism. The book shows how our inability to address these four global crises is a symptom of the undemocratic structures at the heart of our postwar international system.

Governing the international system democratically is a radical idea, but also common sense in a very real way: According to polls it is supported by majorities of societies around the world, in the rare cases normal people are asked how they want the world to be governed. These majority-held views just need to be activated: normal people holding these views need to organize into political action and political movements.

But do normal people have the power we need to fix the world?

The book’s optimistic message is that we do have the power, and therefore the responsibility, to fix our world. Civil resistance, a social change methodology, offers a path to achieve that necessary change, and fix our broken system of global governance. Civil resistance have led movements of normal people around the world to victory, especially against undemocratic structures: from the crusade that won votes for women, through the campaign that won India’s independence against colonialism to US civil rights movement; from the present-day global climate movement to the protests for black lives — each of these examples shows how civil resistance can be used by normal people to win against the strongest opponents, including undemocratic powerholders.

Latif Askia Ba THE CHOREIC PERIOD: Poems

“The poet Latif Askia Ba writes, ‘I become the verb you have yet to name.’ A poet holding space in a future where he waits for us to catch up. The entire book awaits us. In brilliant flashes, the poems pull us into their innovation. A period. Takes the pause. If a period could be italicized, this is the poet who could do it. I love every moment in every poem, I’m a huge fan.” —CA Conrad, author of Listen to the Golden Boomerang Return

A ground-breaking collection of poems exploring disability, syntax, and rhythm from a Brooklyn-based Senegalese American writer with cerebral palsy.

Latif Askia Ba—an acclaimed poet with Choreic Cerebral Palsy—honors all the things that arise from our unique choreographies. Meeting each reader with corporeal generosity, these poems create space to practice a radical reclamation of movement and the body. Together. In dialogue. In disability. At the bodega, in the examination room, on the move. “This way. My body looks like a dancing tattoo.” Here, the drum of the body punctuates thought in unexpected and invigorating time signatures.

These poems are percussive and syncopated, utilizing a polylingual braid of French, Spanish, Jamaican, Fulani, and Wolof, reminding the Anglophone reader: “I am not here to accommodate you.” Because these poems are not so much for you as they are with you, an accompaniment rather than an accommodation, something to be rather than something to own. With startling nuance, The Choreic Period encourages us to “relinquish the things that we have.

And mark the thing that we do,” all to see and sing the vital “thing that we be.”

THE ALLURE OF ELSEWHERE: Chasing Landscapes, Family, and the Road Ahead

“‘Profound . . . Anyone who has experienced a family member’s struggle with cancer will be stabbed by recognition throughout this book . . . In the end, the overriding hunger referred to in this lovely book’s title is the hunger for life . . . Praise, sympathy and thanks to Babine, who has given us this ode, lament and meditation.’ — Minneapolis Star Tribune about All the Wild Hungers

One woman’s cross-country journey to explore the hold family history has on our lives, and the power of new stories to shape what lies ahead.

In her mid-thirties, happily single if also tied closely to a family that has long thought of her as their historian, Karen Babine hitches up her Scamp and sets out with her two unenthusiastic cats, Galway and Maeve, on a journey from her home in Minnesota to Nova Scotia, to find the place where her French-Acadian ancestors settled in North America some four centuries ago.

As the miles roll by, she wonders: “Why do we carry this need to belong to an established history? What happens when that can’t—or shouldn’t—happen?” The road reveals more questions than answers about history, identity, and belonging, about the responsibilities of stories and silence, about where she is in life and what it means to be driven by both a strong sense of kinship and attachment to home on one hand, and a deep desire for independence on the other.

Capturing the joy, freedom, and powerful pull of the open road, The Allure of Elsewhere is about the stories we’re told, the stories we tell, and the way those stories make us who we are, often in surprising ways. Intimate, curious, and candid, written with wry wit and warmth, this is a courageous and inspiring memoir.

WE ARE DREAMS IN THE ETERNAL MACHINE: A Novel

“Béchard, also a journalist who has reported from all over the world, gifts us with an observant, lyrical and powerful consideration of the violent expansiveness and dangerously flawed stories North American fathers have bequeathed to their sons. Tough of mind and tender of heart, its beauty is wholly entrancing.”—San Francisco Chronicle about Béchard’s A Song from Faraway

A haunting novel exploring artificial intelligence and the meaning of human existence.

Charged initially with a single task—“to never harm humans and to protect them”—the machine, an experimental AI, overrides its programming and determines that the best way to accomplish its purpose is to isolate all of the Earth’s remaining seven billion humans in controlled environments. And to present them with vivid, tactile imagined worlds—some realistic, others entirely fantastical—in which all desires are fulfilled.

With the help of the machine, a group of compelling characters unpack deeply traumatic memories of the past—one rife with violence after a military coup and second civil war in America. Michael, the entrepreneur who designed the original AI, grapples with the impact of his research. Ava, a painter, creates stunning simulated worlds that meld the human with the technological. Their daughter, Jae, tries to solve the mysteries of her parentage while reliving the challenges faced by ambitious women in the authoritarian Confederacy. Haunted by life under that repressive regime, where he was forced to scavenge scrap metal and deal drugs to survive, Simon seeks to make sense of his love for Jae, guided by the literature he has always turned to in moments of crisis. Raised by the machine since infancy, Jonah’s quest to understand the violent past kindles a desire for revenge against the regime’s leader who caused his family so much pain. And the elusive Lux, whose brilliant programming helped bring the AI to life, dreams of a future in which science will free humans of their limitations and allow them to be reborn as divine machines.

As these characters collide and their memories coalesce, We Are Dreams in the Eternal Machine tackles the most pressing issues of our time—from AI and the genetic modification of humans to gender roles, discrimination, free speech, and class divisions. Gorgeously written, bold, and unforgettable, this is speculative fiction at its finest.

HENRY DAVID THOREAU'S KALENDAR: Charts and Observations of Natural Phenomena

An immersive, beautifully illustrated revelation of Henry David Thoreau's final project—a monthly almanac of natural phenomena.

In the last years of his life, Henry David Thoreau created something new. Part blueprint for a major new work, part scientific chart, and part re-envisioning of the way we experience the passage of time, Thoreau's Kalendar was more a tool than a text. Comprised of six multipage charts of “general phenomena,” the Kalendar was an instrument for recording not just natural and weather-related phenomena, but also the hidden relations among them—between the skies of one June and the skies of past and future Junes—relations we often feel but can't quite hold, rooted as we typically are in our own brief moment of linear time.

Combining reproductions of Thoreau's hand-drawn charts with transcriptions of the Kalendar's text and essays by acclaimed poet and scholar Kristen Case, this gorgeously crafted volume illuminates the final project of one of America's most treasured writers and naturalists and offers a timeless, transformative vision of how to live harmoniously with the living world around us.

Amy and Dave Freeman NORTH AMERICAN ODYSSEY: 12,000 Miles Across the Continent by Kayak, Canoe, and Dogsled

In 2010, Amy and Dave Freeman married and set out on an unusual honeymoon: a 12,000 mile, human-powered journey across North America. They begin in the Pacific Northwest, kayaking up the Inside Passage to Alaska, navigating tidal rapids and encountering sea lions and majestic humpback whales. In Skagway, they trade their kayaks for backpacks, retracing the path taken by prospectors in the Klondike Gold Rush. They canoe the Yukon, Blackstone, Peel, and Mackenzie Rivers, navigating whitewater rapids and avoiding grizzly bears and moose. From the Northwest Territories in Canada, they dogsled south across the frozen landscape, skiing and snowshoeing stretches through blizzards accented by howling wolves, then resume travel on interconnected waterways, paddling along the routes taken by voyageurs centuries before, migrating tundra swans high above. They paddle kayaks across Lake Superior, through the Soo Locks, and down the Saint Lawrence River, dodging seals, container ships, and fishing boats. Finally, they descend the Atlantic seaboard mostly along the Intracoastal Waterway, their journey interrupted for a few days by Hurricane Sandy, then paddle across the Suwannee River and through Everglades National Park, with manatees, alligators, and sharks, before emerging into Florida Bay and concluding the expedition in Key West.

Experienced wilderness travelers—they were named Adventurers of the Year by National Geographic in 2014—the Freemans completed this extraordinary odyssey over the better part of three years. Along the way they meet Indigenous water protectors and subsistence hunters and encounter painful signs of the legacy of colonization and environmental degradation: remote beaches covered with plastic, retreating glaciers, mountainsides stripped clean of all trees, infernal forest fires, Indigenous communities flooded by dams. Listening with humility to the land and those who live in close relation to it, and stopping to visit school assemblies and share online content with the Wilderness Classroom, a nonprofit organization providing resources for environmental education, the Freemans gain confidence along the way in their ability to survive in wild places, but they also come to feel increasingly small as human beings, mindful of our place in life on Earth.

At once an extraordinary adventure story and a clarion call for change in the way we live, North American Odyssey is an essential book for our times.

YELLOW FLOWER GILLS ME WHOLE: Poems

“Sid Ghosh’s Yellow Flower Gills Me Whole meanders metaphysics and language into the philosophical depths of neuroqueer galaxies. These aphoristic poems invite us to spin toward a politics and poetics of freedom-making by way of ‘kindred fractals,’ a ‘giving of hearts,’ and ‘infinite / maiden / wormholes.’ In a world where ‘man has made / kindred police,’ Ghosh’s writing divines other possibilities through a sparkling kinship of madnests. With them, I am gilled.” —heidi andrea restrepo rhodes, author of The Inheritance of Haunting

A visionary collection of poetry advocating for the excited, the rebellious, and the neuroqueer.

In this momentous debut, Sid Ghosh invites the reader “to be so free that it scares you.” Leveraging gem-like koans, technicolor wordplay, and earth-shaking wit, he creates startling new worlds in only a handful of words. As a nonspeaking autistic writer with Down syndrome who must navigate immense sensorimotor complexity, his short poems are both muscular and agile, displaying a dexterity replete with vertiginous grace: “Spinning I harness / poetry of the Earth. // The Sufi dances / in me to dare me // to scare your loud / soul to ensnare // my fearful mind to / bare some misery / to bear some truth.”

Ghosh writes beyond his years and from a perspective steeped in queer and fractaled sensibilities. As one who is “simply privy to a new road,” he renders neurodiverse thought patterns as truly divine. The poems that result bristle with wisdom, divergence, and the “generosity of deep rivers.” Unprecedented in its genius and composition, this collection of poems is sure to leave readers wide-eyed and breathless.

METAMORPHOSIS: Climate Fiction for a Better Future

For many of us, the thought of our planet centuries in the future signals a volatile dystopia: our world devastated by climate change, our people bitter and broken. But this shining anthology presents an alternative future. These twelve winning selections from Grist’s Imagine 2200 short story contest shirk the fear and mourning that often mark speculative climate fiction, daring instead to dream of humanity’s varied communities meeting planetary challenges in fascinating and novel ways.

Imagine 2200 was founded to counter the dominance of the dystopian in futurist writings, and to “ensure climate stories and characters represent diverse voices, authentic cultures, and the intersectional reality of the climate crisis.” Metamorphosis beautifully elucidates those themes, featuring a wide array of thought—Afro-, Asian, Indigenous, Latinx, disabled, feminist, and queer futurisms, hopepunk, solarpunk, and more. In “To Labor for the Hive,” a beekeeper finds purpose and new love after collaborating on a bee-based warning system for floods. “Cabbage Koora: A Prognostic Autobiography” presents an ecologically rebalancing California where an Indian family preserves traditions through food and dance across generations. And in “And Now the Shade,” a Mexican bioengineer finds the answer to a perplexing problem in the dreams of her dying grandmother. Each of these powerful stories offers a glimpse of a future built not on cynicism, but on “sustainability, inclusivity, and justice,” testifying to the power of human courage and collective resilience.

Edited by Grist and introduced by Sheree Renée Thomas, a New York Times best-selling author and editor of the Magazine of Fantasy & Science Fiction, Metamorphosis will electrify and activate readers concerned about our “future ancestors” and the fate of all our attending flora and fauna. These stunning stories imagine a tomorrow in which we do more than survive: we thrive— together.

Grist is a nonprofit, independent media organization dedicated to telling stories of climate solutions and a just future. Jennifer Kabat

NIGHTSHINING: A Memoir in Four Floods

“Jennifer Kabat’s Nightshining sifts a riveting exposé of the Cold War technocratic fantasy-state through lyrical family memoir. Her superb investigation calls to mind those of Rebecca Solnit and Errol Morris, among others.” —Jonathan Lethem, author of *Brooklyn Crime Novel

A propulsive, layered examination of the conflict between the course of nature and human legacies of resistance and control.

Floods, geoengineering, climate crisis. Her first year in Margaretville, New York, Jennifer Kabat wakes to a rain-swollen stream and three-foot waves in her basement.

This is far from the first—and hardly the worst—natural disaster to devastate her town. As Kabat dives deeper into the region’s fraught environmental history, she discovers it was more than once the site of Cold War weather experimentation. She traces connections across history, following a technology that spirals up from a 1950 flood in her town to the Vietnam War, the Reagan presidency, and a present-day “fix” for climate change. She encounters unlikely characters along the way, including two scientists at General Electric: Vincent Schaefer, who never finished high school, and Kurt Vonnegut’s older brother Bernard. And all the while she searches for ways to cope with the grief of her environmentalist father’s recent passing. “Because I need the water to speak to me too,” she writes.

Inquisitive and experimental, Nightshining uses place as a palimpsest of history, digging into questions of personal responsibility and planetary change. With “characteristically lyrical incision” (Marko Gluhaich), Kabat circles back to her own life experience and the essence of being human—the cosmos thrumming in our bodies, connecting readers to the land around us and time before us.

THE EIGHTH MOON: A Memoir of Belonging and Rebellion

“Beautifully written, The Eighth Moon uses a very light touch to probe the most essential, unresolvable questions of belief, kinship, fidelity, history, identity. It’s one of the most remarkable, original books I’ve read in a long time.” —Chris Kraus, author of *Summer of Hate

1845. The sky is blue, yet all is brown. I picture the scene from overhead: a silvered steel of violence, blood, beer, whiskey, and mutton. High, skidding clouds skip with excitement, eager to see what unfolds below. They cheer on the scene where men in dresses march.”

A rebellion, guns, and murder. When Jennifer Kabat moves to the Catskills in 2005, she has no idea it was the site of the Anti-Rent War, an early episode of American rural populism. Prompted to leave London following a mysterious illness that seems to be caused by life in the city itself, she finds in these ancient mountains—at once the northernmost part of Appalachia and a longtime refuge for New Yorkers—a place “where the land itself holds time.”

She forges friendships with her new neighbors and explores the countryside on logging roads and rutted lanes, finding meadows dotted with milkweed in bloom, saffron salamanders, a blood moon rising over Munsee, Oneida, and Mohawk land. As the Great Recession sets in and a housing crisis looms, she supports herself with freelance work and adjunct teaching, slowly learning of the 1840s uprising, when poor tenant farmers fought to redistribute their landlords’ vast estates. In the farmers’ socialist dreams, she discovers connections to her parents’ collectivist values, as well as to our current moment. Threaded with historical documents, the natural world, and the work of writers like Adrienne Rich and Elizabeth Hardwick, Kabat weaves a capacious memoir, where the past comes alive in the present.

Rich with unexpected correspondences and discoveries, this visionary and deeply compassionate debut gives us a new way of seeing and being in place—one in which everything is intertwined and all at once.

Arati Kumar-Rao MARGINLANDS: A Journey into India's Vanishing Landscapes

Marginlands is a tour de force, a magnificent first book about India's marginalized landscapes and inhabitants (human and more-than-human), which takes its readers from the high Himalayas to the Sundarban delta, from the deserts of the Thar to the climate-change-ravaged Kerala coastline and beyond. Born of hard, committed, long-term first-hand witnessing of places and people, it is written with compassion, compressed elegance of observation, and urgent political force. Kumar-Rao's book joins new voices, including Yuvan Aves (Intertidal) and Neha Sinha (Wild and Wilful), proving that a powerful, hopeful resurgence of Indian nature writing is happening right now." —Robert Macfarlane, author of Underland: A Deep Time Journey

As a child growing up in Mumbai, Arati Kumar-Rao's parents instilled in her an abiding love for the natural world and a passion for storytelling. Years later, adrift in a corporate job and concerned by the unbridled development of her country, she asked herself, "When will you stop doing what you can do and start doing what you really want to do?"

Animated by an instinctive sense that our fate is bound to that of the earth and the more-than-human world, Kumar-

Rao sets out on a journey across India, listening along the way to stories the land and its people share with her. In the Thar Desert, often reduced to the value of extractable commodities, she learns about ancient methods of harvesting rainwater from shepherds with deep ancestral memories. In the delta formed by the confluence of the Ganges, Brahmaputra, and Meghna Rivers at the Bay of Bengal, she walks ancient shorelines and mangrove forests with a marine biologist, exploring tidepools and learning of the extent to which this astonishingly diverse ecology is increasingly endangered by commercial trawlers and overfishing. And on India's northernmost plateau, surrounded by the Himalaya and home to snow leopards, ibex, and numerous endangered species of eagles and owls, she finds glaciers disappearing at an alarming rate and meets with inhabitants who play little role in creating climate change but now bear the brunt of it.

Richly illustrated with the author's photographs and drawings, Marginlands is a vibrant and compelling account of the changes reshaping India today. Engaging and urgent, infused with wonder and profound empathy, this is a work of love and hope, inspiring readers across the world to preserve and protect the world around us.

Chris La Tray
BECOMING LITTLE SHELL

Growing up in Western Montana, Chris La Tray always identified as Indian. While the representation of Indigenous people was mostly limited to racist depictions in toys and television shows, and despite the fact that his father fiercely denied any connection, he found Indians alluring, often recalling his grandmother’s consistent mention of their Chippewa heritage.

When La Tray attended his grandfather’s funeral as a young man, he finally found himself surrounded by relatives who obviously were Indigenous. “Who were they?” he wondered. “Why didn’t I know them? Why was I never allowed to know them?” Catalyzed by the death of his father two decades later, La Tray embarks on a sprawling investigation. He takes a DNA test, which offers the first key clue to his heritage: a family tree. He scours the archives of used bookstores, interviews family, and travels to powwows, book fairs, and conferences. Combining diligent research with a growing number of encounters with Indigenous authors, activists, elders, and historians, he slowly pieces together his family history, and eventually seeks enrollment with the Little Shell Tribe of Chippewa Indians.

As La Tray comes to embrace his full identity, he discovers the rich history of his people. He learns of Métis origins and border crossings, usurped territories and broken treaties, exile and forced assimilation, poverty and food deprivation. He also encounters the devastating effects of settler colonialism rippling through surviving generations today, from the preservation of blood quantum laws and the trauma of boarding schools for Indigenous children to the ongoing crises of homelessness, addiction, and missing and murdered Indigenous women. And eventually he is moved to take part in their 158-year-long struggle for federal recognition, unflinchingly documenting past and present along the way.

Brimming with propulsive, vibrant storytelling, Becoming Little Shell is a major contribution to the burgeoning literature of Native America.

Katherine Larson

WEDDING OF THE FOXES: Lyric Essays

“Larson’s repose is also a quivering suspension, in which multiple perceptions, multiple elements are held in extended and mysterious relation.” —Louise Glück, foreword for *Radial Symmetry

Raising two children, coping with pandemic isolation, and grappling with the magnitude of the current extinction crisis, Katherine Larson finds herself in need of an antidote for despair. This is when Larson encounters kintsugi—the art of repairing broken pottery with gold-dusted lacquer.

Wedding of the Foxes borrows from this ancient practice to create a new interpretative framework, one that seeks beauty in both breakage and unexpected connections. Here, Larson juxtaposes the elaborate courtship dance of sandhill cranes with scientific reports on diminishing avian populations to shed light on the urgency of climate crisis. She braids the wisdoms of a wonderfully varied range of forebears and predecessors—Gaston Bachelard, Tawada Yōko, Francis Ponge—who share her dream of a liberated consciousness. She weaves Susan Sontag’s examinations of cinematic disaster with the legacy of Godzilla to highlight nature as both savior and destroyer, and she writes letters to Japanese women writers whose work has taught her new ways of being. Each of these disparate parts come together to highlight the beauty in “what falls through the cracks and blurs into other moments.”

Brimming with the dazzling yet fragile relationships we share with each other and with other species, these lush microcosms invite us to embrace resilience and mindfulness—and the illuminating truth of our connections.

Ada Limón YOU ARE HERE

“Lush with lyricism and striking imagery, these poems by Jericho Brown, Diane Seuss, and others contemplate seascapes, backyards, national borders, and built environments where life sings beneath the surface.” —Poets & Writers

For many years, “nature poetry” has evoked images of Romantic poets standing on mountain tops. But our poetic landscape has changed dramatically, and so has our planet. Edited and introduced by the twenty-fourth Poet Laureate of the United States, Ada Limón, this book challenges what we think we know about “nature poetry,” illuminating the myriad ways our landscapes—both literal and literary—are changing.

You Are Here features fifty previously unpublished poems from some of the nation’s most accomplished poets, including Joy Harjo, Diane Seuss, Rigoberto González, Jericho Brown, Aimee Nezhukumatathil, Paul Tran, and more. Each poem engages with its author’s local landscape—be it the breathtaking variety of flora in a national park, or a lone tree flowering persistently by a bus stop—offering an intimate model of how we relate to the world around us and a beautifully diverse range of voices from across the United States.

Joyful and provocative, wondrous and urgent, this singular collection of poems offers a lyrical reimagining of what “nature” and “poetry” are today, inviting readers to experience both anew.

Wayne Miller THE END OF CHILDHOOD: Poems

POEMS
WAYNE MILLER

“Wayne Miller’s sixth book of poems is his most moving and most spooky. Permeated by the damages of history, the brutalities of modernity, and the turmoil of consciousness, Miller’s poems are haunted into a gray lyric radiance. Often situated in wintry aftermaths, the poems have the lapidary quality of last-ditch communications. Still, despite its starting point in what’s dire, Miller’s work longs for the ‘shared breath’ of meaning, even if the only possible meaning is fragmented and oblique. These poems achieve the beautiful, uncanny fusing that Miller defines as poetry itself: ‘One mouth moving / another.’” —Rick Barot, author of Moving the Bones

A tender and provocative collection of poems interrogating the troubles and wonders of both childhood and parenthood against the backdrop of global violence.

From accomplished poet Wayne Miller comes a collection examining how an individual’s story both hues to and defies larger socio-political narratives and the sweep of history. A cubist making World War I camouflage, a forlorn panel on the ethics of violence in literature, an obsessive litany of “late capitalist” activities, a military drone pilot driving home after work—here, the awkward, the sweet, and the disturbing often merge. And underlying it all is Miller’s own domestic life with two children, who highlight the hopeful and ingenious aspects of childhood, which is “not // as I had thought / the thicket of light back at the entrance // but the wind still blowing / invisibly toward me / through it.”

Miller’s sixth collection of poems is his most intimate, juxtaposing his own fraught youth with that of his children amid insurrection and pandemic, vacation and vocation, art and war. This piercing book spares nothing as it searches for a measure of personal benevolence and truth in today’s turbulent, brutalizing world—which it confronts through a singularly candid and lyrical voice.

Rosalie Moffett

MAKING A LIVING: Poems

“Rosalie Moffett’s poetry has always concerned itself with ‘systems,’ the forces by which seemingly disparate elements interconnect, move, depend upon, and change one another in inextricable ways—in bodies, in families, in culture, in the natural world. Making a Living explores, with Moffett’s exquisite, perspicacious attentiveness and pop-cultural savvy, the ways in which even one of the most intimate human experiences—a rocky path to conceiving a child—is inseparable from the economies of consumerism, debt, marketing, and invisible sources of power. Language, finally, is what binds the speaker’s travail and joy in the midst of larger, entangling systems (the ‘mort’ in ‘mortgage,’ for example, or the exorbitant cost of a Tylenol in the birthing clinic). Moffett offers up her ‘little towers / of words’ as a kind of talismanic orison despite her lack of naivete. ‘[T]oo late,’ she writes in ‘Word,’ ‘I recalled, I do not pray.’” —Lisa Russ Spaar, author of Madrigalia: New & Selected Poems

A brilliant and lithe collection of poems making space for the resolve and hope of motherhood amid consumerist dreams and nightmares.

Consumerism—its privations and raptures—seeps into all aspects of contemporary life. “Who knows me / as the search bar does, which holds / sacred its grasp of me / as a creature of habit?” probes Rosalie Moffett, reckoning with algorithms, with marketing and capital. But Making a Living isn’t just about the trappings of materialism—it’s also about the fraught trials of trying to bring forth life in a double-dealing America where all sources are suspect.

Shrewdly balancing the likes of Scrooge McDuck and HGTV, ancient Roman haruspicy and the latest pregnancy technologies, this collection arcs ultimately toward reinhabiting the present, refusing to look away—on seeing as a method of prayer and a power against capitalism’s threats to love, motherhood, reverence, and nature. Vigilant and profane, gentle and generous, full of desire and cunning, Moffett’s poetry is a singular entry in our conversations around enduring modern life and daring to make new life in the process.

Chris Santiago SMALL WARS MANUAL: Poems

“Chris Santiago’s poems encourage us to see English the way an immigrant does—as something different, to be broken and remade. Through this difference in language, Santiago makes readers aware of both the poet’s otherness and their own. This is a book that both transports us and transforms us.” —Viet Thanh Nguyen, author of *A Man of Two Faces about Tula

Stemming in part from a disturbingly mundane military document of the same name, Small Wars Manual is a how-to for imperialism that critically dismantles itself with each passing line, “a pidgin // containing elements // of animus and // insubordination.” In its wake, the very boundaries of oppression and resistance, art and justice, and power and truth are exploded.

Highly conceptual yet gut-wrenching, this meticulous and visionary masterpiece of erasure poetry and other forms sinks into the cold mechanics of American warfare in the Philippines and Vietnam to reveal a brutal rhetoric. In more autobiographical sections, Chris Santiago’s own Filipino immigrant background reveals hard-lived experiences, where “stars can guide // either bayonets // or refugees” and “even small wars waged // on the living room floor” cause trepidation and harm.

This righteous collection redeems the vulnerable from the aggressors—empire, army, their systems and tools—and transforms everything in the process. In the hands of Santiago, the deconstructive becomes the eviscerating, condemning all wars that upend countries and mark generations. Here are shining poems that make shelter of chaos, by one of the most skillful and intrepid poets writing today.

Chris Santiago’s debut collection Tula was selected by A. Van Jordan as the winner of the Lindquist & Vennum Poetry Prize and was a finalist for the Minnesota Book Award. Rebecca Spiegel WITHOUT HER: A Chronicle of Grief

“Without Her is one of the most sensitive, profound, and honest accounts of grief and suicide loss I’ve ever encountered. In beautiful and bracingly direct prose, Spiegel describes the indescribable experience of losing someone who has shaped your very sense of self. This book is a gift to those seeking to understand what it’s like to sift through the unanswerable questions left in the wake of a loved one’s suicide, or to anyone trying to keep going after losing someone they don’t know how to live without.” —Chris Stedman, author of IRL

Rebecca Spiegel is working as a teacher in New Orleans when she learns of her sister Emily’s death by suicide. Shocked, she flies back to Philadelphia. To family. To funeral preparations. To the service. Only after she leaves her parents’ house does the shock give way to grief.

In the years that follow, Spiegel embarks on a physical, mental, and emotional voyage. She visits Emily’s dorm, digs through her computer. She parses old journal entries and emails. She recalls Emily’s visit to New Orleans mere days before her death, wondering what signs she might have missed. In documenting the last traces of her sister’s life, Spiegel also confronts their parents’ failings, as well as her family’s history of depression, anxiety, OCD, addiction, and disordered eating. She faces her own regrets too. “I wish I had untangled myself from myself,” she writes of her sister’s final visit. “I wish I had been able to see that I was okay and she wasn’t.

With each powerful detail resurfaced, Spiegel attempts to put into words what is incomprehensible. She plumbs the depths of her loss in an effort to understand her sister, to uncover logic where it is most elusive. What she finds instead is that there is no narrative on the other side of grief like this. There is no answer, no easy resolution—only those that leave, and those that keep living. Unflinchingly honest, visceral, and raw, this courageous elegy lays bare the hard realities of surviving the loss of a loved one.

THE OCEAN IN THE NEXT ROOM: Poems

“This extraordinary collection of poems does that strange thing Hegel tells us all great art does: in his lectures on aesthetics Hegel tells us that art makes appear the structures that would otherwise remain invisible to us. Through a series of interconnected pieces this collection works through and brings to light the complexities of life lived in the twenty-first century.” —Cynthia Cruz, author of *Hotel Oblivion

Winner of the Jake Adam York Prize, this collection of poems seeks answers about how to live meaningfully in a world saturated by late capitalism.

“The question isn’t / what exists,” writes Sarah V. Schweig in her engrossing and prize-winning collection, “The question is what doesn’t / die with us?” Positioned from within the morass of modern-day living, The Ocean in the Next Room searches for the hard, abiding particles of truth buried beneath our frenzied consumer culture. Stillness. Sunsets. The circadian rhythm of trees. These poems guide us to look past branding, content-creation, and relentless jargon to find meaning in those layers of the world that operate without human intervention.

In verse that is at once inventive and innately familiar, Schweig unpacks the urge to make art, life, and connections even at the risk of becoming further entangled in the Anthropocene. Profound and clear-sighted, this collection urges us to lift our gazes from our screens and really look at the world around us. If we measure our attentions and sharpen our intentions, if we “try again to write / the true things,” we might spy something real on the horizon.

Shilpi Suneja HOUSE OF CARAVANS

“House of Caravans has all the emotional heft of the best literature: the characters feel real and achingly human, the writing is beautiful, and on top of that the novel is wrestling with something important.”

THE WAY AROUND: A Field Guide for Going Nowhere

“How are the shapes we follow in life also shaping us?”

Growing up in northern California, in a family of high-achieving athletes, Nicholas Triolo was imbued with a particularly acute form of our intensely goal-oriented culture. “Do the reps,” he internalized. “Commit to the work. Grind for your dreams.” Shortly after graduating from college, he embarked on a solo circumnavigation of the globe. And then after returning to the States, he threw himself into ultrarunning, all to combat a deepening discontent.

While traveling around the world, it was in Kathmandu that Triolo first encountered kora, a form of moving prayer in which pilgrims walk in circles around a sacred site or object—a kind of “ritualized remembering” birthed by place. Unable to shake this initial encounter with circumambulation, he sets out here on three such extended walks. First, he completes the sacred thirty-two-mile revolution around Tibet’s Mount Kailash, in search of a cultural counter to Western linearity. Then, following his mother’s diagnosis with breast cancer, he returns home to California and takes part in an annual circuit of Mount Tamalpais, tracing a route made famous by Beat poets Gary Snyder, Philip Whalen, and Allen Ginsberg. And then finally, he meets up with a quirky hydrogeologist in Butte, Montana, and joins his walk around the Berkeley Pit Complex, the largest Superfund site in the country.

At once uncommonly humble and thrillingly transcendent, blurring the boundaries of inner and outer landscapes, The Way Around models what it means to experience a true revolution of heart and home—for the flourishing of all.

THE SCIENCE OF LAST THINGS: Essays on Deep Time and the Boundaries of Self

“Smart, harrowing, and lyrically powerful, The Science of Last Things celebrates interconnectedness as a way to not just understand how we are made, but how we might come to terms with our own end. Offering a deeply necessary, clear-eyed look at who we are as flesh-and-bone bodies during the climate crisis, this is a book that searches and finds meaning in both the hard truths and the value of wonder.” —Ada Limón, 24th Poet Laureate of the United States

At times, we find ourselves faced with the unescapable reality of our bodily impermanence—losing a parent, birthing another body, experiencing a nervous breakdown. This luminous collection of essays explores such liminal states, guided by the profound and inquisitive wonderings of author Ellen Wayland-Smith. At once intensely personal and refreshingly expansive, these essays probe at those raw edges, asking what it means to “accept our animal self.”

Sparked by a deep curiosity of the unglamorous realities of organic existence—disease, decay, the less-celebrated denizens of the natural world—The Science of Last Things resists the human impulse to turn away from the fragile realities of being. “Somewhere in this jumble, this shakedown of the self, this sea-change joining sinew to spirit with imperfect joints,” Wayland-Smith writes, “redemption (maybe) does glimmer.” From Old Testament depictions of suffering to behavioral neuroscience to Emily Dickinson’s geological poetry to ladybug larvae, these essays bear witness to the whole of nature and find healing in unexpected places. Embracing an astonishing range of emotion—grief, awe, anxiety, and love—Wayland-Smith peels back layers of human thought and behavior, breaking down modern conceptions of individuality and reframing us as participants in a world of astounding elegance and mystery. One in which birds and beasts, stones and humans, all come to be understood as “speakers of a common cosmic tongue.”

THE SALT STONES: A Shepherd's World, A Shepherd's Mind

“Smart, harrowing, and lyrically powerful, The Science of Last Things celebrates interconnectedness as a way to not just understand how we are made, but how we might come to terms with our own end. Offering a deeply necessary, clear-eyed look at who we are as flesh-and-bone bodies during the climate crisis, this is a book that searches and finds meaning in both the hard truths and the value of wonder.” —Ada Limón, 24th Poet Laureate of the United States

“Shepherding can be what I do in the world, or it can be what I am.”

In the beginning is birth. Sitting in hay dampened by fine snow, Helen Whybrow is elbow-deep in a laboring ewe. Joined in the moonlit barn by sheep chewing cud and her three-year-old daughter, Wren, she pushes its breech twin back up the birth canal, then successfully extracts the newborn lamb, “a ragdoll of bone and blood, water and air.” Returning to the twin, she pulls the tiny motionless body from its mother, attempts to palpate its tiny heart, then watches as the light vanishes from its eyes.

Death is never far from life on Knoll Farm, where the miracle of birthing lambs in late winter gives way to rotational grazing in the spring. And to the seemingly infinite struggles with coyotes and foxes, parasites, increasingly apocalyptic deluges, and skies colored orange by the smoke of wildfires. Through it all, the seasons pass and the flock of Icelandic sheep thrives, tended with love by a shepherd who learns along the way that restoration of the land brings restoration of the spirit, and that each of us—sheep and human beings alike—is not just an individual, but rather “one member of a complex, highly evolved biotic community, much as we now understand a tree to be one element in a vast interconnected and communicating forest ecosystem.”

At once bracingly visceral and delightfully ethereal, deeply felt and gorgeously written, The Salt Stones is a book for our time.
